This grant supported a philosophy colloquium series with 4 invited speakers, and 5 public talks. Two speakers came to campus in the Fall, and two in the Spring.

Summary of Programs and Attendance

Event 1: Professor Richard Schacht, Philosophy Department, University of Illinois
“Nietzsche’s Naturalism” (public lecture)
September 28, 4 p.m.
Weisz Room, The Maples

The audience consisted of around 15 students, faculty, and others from the community.

Event 2: Professor Susan Stark, Philosophy Department, Bates College
“Ordinary Virtue”
November 8, 4 p.m.
Bangor Room, Memorial Union

The audience consisted of around a dozen students, faculty, and others from the community.

Event 3: Professor William P. Seeley, Philosophy Department, Bates College
“Mammals and Music among Others: Crossmodal Perception and Musical Expressiveness” (public lecture)
co-sponsored with the Philosophy Club
March 18, 3:30 p.m.
Donald P. Corbett Business Building

The audience consisted of about 20 students, faculty and others from the community, including some from the Music program.

Event 4: Philosophy Visiting Scholar, Professor Thomas Pogge, Professor of Philosophy and International Affairs, Yale University
“Poverty, Inequality and Regulatory Capture” (1st public lecture)
co-sponsored with Socialist and Marxist Studies
April 18, 12:30 p.m.
Bangor Room, Memorial Union

“Tracking Poverty” (2nd public lecture)

4 p.m.

Bangor Room, Memorial Union

The audience for each of these talks included students, faculty and community members, with particular interest from the School for Policy and International Affairs, and some regular attendants at the Socialist and Marxist Studies Luncheon Series. The first talk had an audience of around 40 the second around 30.

Promotion

Each event was promoted through e-mail announcements, posted flyers (see attached), postings on the Philosophy Department website and Facebook page, and announcements in classes.

Modifications to program or budget made after award:

We originally anticipated 6 speakers. Three withdrew (Simon, Xu, and Sawicki), and one of these was replaced (with Seeley). There were also some savings because two speakers preferred to drive home early rather than stay for dinner, and Thomas Pogge drove instead of flying. So the total expense for the series is somewhat less than our original budget projection. The honorarium for Seeley was somewhat higher than what had been budgeted for Sawicki, because of co-sponsorship with the Philosophy Club. The club covered the cost of Seeley’s meal, and the poster design, printing, and distribution.

Attached: a final budget, an Adjusting Entry form listing expenses, and GL printouts showing expenses.

Philosophy 2012-2013 Colloquium Series

Friday, September 28th, at 4:00 p.m.
The <sup>W/2152</sup>Levinson Room (2nd Floor)
The Maples

Speaker:
Professor Richard Schacht
Philosophy Department, University of Illinois

Title: “Nietzsche’s Naturalism”

ABSTRACT:

Nietzsche, I contend and many agree, was a fundamentally “naturalistic” thinker. But there are many ways of thinking that can be called “naturalistic”; and it would be a mistake to suppose that any particular one of them is what he advocated and pursued—especially since there are some kinds of naturalism of which he himself is disdainful. So we need to consider what kind of naturalism Nietzsche’s is—particularly as it relates to the natural sciences. I argue that it is one that respects and draws upon these sciences but does not limit itself to reliance upon them and take all of its cues from them. It is not a scientific naturalism. I then discuss some types of human phenomena of which Nietzsche considers it important for us to be mindful and appreciative, both in the interpretation of human reality and in our understanding of the contours of his naturalism.

Philosophy 2012-2013 Colloquium Series

Thursday, November 8th, at 4:00 p.m.
Bangor Room, Memorial Union

Speaker:
Professor Susan Stark
Philosophy Department, Bates College

Title: “Ordinary Virtue”

ABSTRACT:

An impressive body of psychological data casts serious doubt on our ordinary conception of the human agent, as someone who is responsible for her actions and an appropriate subject of praise and blame. Based on these studies, many psychologists and philosophers conclude that it is the situation and its unique set of psychological pressures that determines the individual's action. This view has come to be known as situationism. On the basis of this data, some philosophers have concluded that there is no such thing as enduring character traits that themselves determine an individual's actions. John Doris, for instance, has argued that character traits are local, rather than global. In addition to this critique of individuals, Doris and others have argued that there is no point in developing or refining moral theories based upon character, theories like virtue theory. Some virtue theorists, however, have attempted a response to this critique. But these virtue theorists have not yet explained how it is that the morally good person can be attuned to surprising factors, seemingly morally irrelevant factors, to still arrive at a correct understanding of what is morally required. Moreover, moral theorists want, not only an account of how the virtuous person arrives at such an understanding of what is morally required, but we also want an account of how the ordinary person can develop such as to also reach such an understanding. The aim of my paper is to provide both of these accounts and thereby show that virtue theory can withstand the situationist's critique.

“TRACKING POVERTY”

4:00 p.m.

Bangor Room

Abstract: Various indices are used to track poverty, development, and gender equity at the population level. Some of them – the UNDP’s Human and Gender-Related Development Indices, and the World Bank’s Poverty Index associated with the first Millennium Development Goal – have become highly influential. This paper argues that these prominent indices are deeply flawed and therefore distort our moral judgments and misguide resource allocations by governments, international agencies, and NGOs. Examination of these flaws reveals useful pointers toward developing better indices – though much interdisciplinary work will be needed before sound and practicable indices are actually available.

“POVERTY, INEQUALITY AND REGULATORY CAPTURE”

Socialist and Marxist Studies Luncheon Series

12:30 p.m.

Bangor Room

Abstract: One important driver of the persistence of poverty and increasing global inequality is supranational regulatory capture. Establishing this point leads to the conclusions (a) that much of today’s severe poverty constitutes a human rights violation committed through supranational rule design and (b) that the eradication of severe poverty requires mainstreaming the concern for the poor beyond the niche of development assistance. It also suggests that (c) the first Millennium Development Goal -- the aim to reduce the number of extremely poor and the number of chronically undernourished by 27 percent in the 1990-2015 period -- was/is grotesquely under-ambitious and that (d) these MDGs, not coupled with tasks or responsibilities of specific agents, were a wish list more than a set of serious goals. What we need post-2015 is the commitment to eradicate severe poverty fast and completely, coupled with clear responsibilities assigned to specific competent actors pledged to keep the effort on the announced glide path.
