Superintendent's Report.

Gentlemen : —

Another mile-stone having been reached in the onward march of our schools, we feel that it is due to you as well as to ourselves, to pause, and look back upon the months that are past, make a brief summary of the work accomplished, that you may the better be able to judge of our efforts, and any degree of success which may have resulted therefrom. Some will feel disappointed, but disappointments are the common lot of us all.

The year has in many respects been a success. Good attendance, good progress and thorough work have characterized our school for the year. Every teacher in town during the year has tried honestly, I have no doubt, to do well and to obtain good results, but some are natural teachers, while others are not. The former class will be successful, the latter only partially so. Your teachers, with one or two exceptions, are graduates of Normal Schools and Seminaries and have had extensive experience in teaching.

The schools are all well classified and good discipline has been maintained throughout the year. At the closing examination, found excellent progress had been made. Some of the smaller scholars made wonderful improvement.

The thoroughness of the classes was very commendable to both teachers and scholars. It is to be regretted that there are so few children attending school over fifteen years of age. The tendency to leave school and engage in some work, or waste the time in idleness is increasing each year. It is unfortunate for children to be old beyond their years, to know things which it is unwise for them to know, and to be thinking of sex relations long before such thoughts should enter their minds. If they have lost their relish and interest in the duties which should make up a large part of their lives and are more anxious to fill an inferior place in some store or shop than they are to continue their studies, and fit themselves for a useful place in society, then, we must realize that some one has failed in what he has given these children at their birth or made them since they were born. It is natural for young people to be ambitious, and when we find them limp, lifeless and frivolous, we do not wonder that they dislike work and look with contempt upon labor and those who perform it. The disposition to destroy public property or use it in a destructive way has increased to an alarming extent within the past few years. Many children seem to have the feeling that if anything is furnished and paid for by the public, they have no responsibility for protecting it or using it in such a way as to get the greatest good out of it and inflict the least injury upon it. They are destructive to an extent that shows a condition of feeling which gives one great uneasiness when he realizes to what result such practices must lead. The school and the home should train children to have a proper regard for public property and the rights of the public, and should teach that one is no more justified in abusing property owned by the public than he is in abusing property owned by a private individual.

It is not true that things come to him who waits, unless he is working while he is waiting. Work is as necessary to development as to living, and we cannot make much of ourselves except we grow by our own efforts. It is necessary for us to realize that if we are to grow, we must draw our strength from thought, effort, aspiration. It must be clear to any thoughtful person that the tendency of the present age is to breed in the children a Bohemian spirit and tone that is peculiarly unwholesome. The desire for attractive dress, and the anxiety to be before the public and the ambition to be amused and entertained have become so strong in many young people that it would be well for parents and teachers to consider for time the wisdom of developing in the children right ideas of what life is. If we clad our children in plainer apparel, discouraged bicycle riding, fed them with more simple and more nourishing food and bred in them the desire to be responsible for some service, we should not be discouraged by the manifestations we see exhibited on the part of some boys and girls. They would travel the roads less; they would be found in the home and schoolroom more; they would be less restive under restraint; they would be more willing to obey directions; they would be less devoted to excitement and frivolities: and they would have a larger interest in study, thought and work. In a word, they would be growing into young men and women who have some object in life, and who are beginning to realize that if they are to fill a place in the world they must commence at the bottom, toil through the stages which come between the beginning and an advanced position, and earn by their own work and merit a respected place in the community.
