CHAPTER SIXTEENTH.

AN UNEXPECTED CLUE.

"There is a picture for you," said the Earl to Mr. Dulon, "and one which would test pretty nearly the incredulity of our untraveled Academicians." He pointed to the gray and rugged mountains, which formed a background for the town of Helena, and to the sky above them. The blood-red color was slowly fading away now, yielding its place to great irregular stains of copper and greenish purple.

"The imagination of a scene painter at Drury Lane might evolve such colors as this for the fairy and of his pantomime," said Lady Helena, "but I should never have believed, without seeing them, that they could exist in nature."

"There they are, though," said the young painter, stoutly; "and I am glad to know that I have reliable witnesses to prove that I am not crazy when I open my exhibition in Brook street."

They were jolting forward from the railway station to Helena in a shaky omnibus under the patronage of a saucy negro "conductor." As they talked Capt. Jobson had promised them a supper at the principal hotel and a view of the picturesque crowd of miners in the street, and they had gladly accompanied him. Young Ringdale was jubilant; he said that the evening breeze, the mountain atmosphere and the liberation from the slavery of the excursion had given him a wonderful new fund of gaiety. Floyd was by no means happy, but he felt excited and eager. A new purpose had come into his life. Jostling aside the art ambitions, he was no longer anxious to reach the far shores of Washington Territory, that he might leave his companions and take ship for the outer confines of the Arctic circle, where he expected to find strange subjects for his brush; but he was in a fever of haste to be in San Francisco, and to aid Ringdale—yes, to help Lady Helena—if she required such help—to find the missing "Lord John."

"This Helena is a town of millionaires," said Captain Jobson, who appeared to know everything about all places, "Millionaires who are very sorry that the railroad has come along here, as they are afraid that it will take away some of their privileges. 'Cute fellers, ain't they? See how the old town snuggles up against the foothills, and looks sort of scornfully at the railroad depot.'"

The Earl said he thought Captain Jobson was rather poetical in calling Helena an "old" town.

"Wal, no," rejoined the Captain, reflectively, "Government established a post office here in

BUFFALO, Oct. 9, 1884

Rev. James Freeman Clarke:

Dear Sir—Your speech in Tremont Temple October 1 perplexes me. Your easy faith in Cleveland and severe judgment against Mr. Blair are both surprising. Since the days of the Liberty party I have found myself in accord with your lines of thought and action till now, but for your present attitude I am compelled to most decidedly dissent. Your methods of inquiry into facts and your processes of reasoning are unimpeachable, you, and, allow me to suggest, unworthy of you. You have sought facts where they were least likely to be found, and ignored sources where they should have been sought. You visited Albany, asked the accused if he was a bad man, and believed him when he told you that he had "not done anything for 8 or 10 years to disgrace himself," that he had been "brought to a much higher plane," and you assert, "I don't believe there is any reason to doubt that he will always confine himself on that plane." But you did not inquire of ministers, lawyers and physicians in Buffalo, who charge him with gross immoralities, not "8 or 10 years" old, but as recent as 1884, and who profess to have ample proof of their allegations. It is strange that you did not come on to Buffalo when you were so near, and learn from us here about the case.

You trust the conclusions of Rev. Dr. Twining, who made a flying visit to Buffalo and spent a part of two days here in a frame of mind that led him to believe whatever Mr. Cleveland's special defenders told him, and nothing that clergymen, lawyers and business men, who had no motive to misrepresent, told him. You also seemed to forget the significant fact that the Independent when Mr. Twining represented had no confidence in his report, but on evidence from more reliable sources denounced Cleveland as a debauchee, too vile to be endured, though it had before eulogized him as a model of excellence. You forgot, also, that all the other religious papers in New York on the same evidence, recalled their indorsements of his character and counted him a "moral leper."

You rely upon a second-hand opinion of H. E. Carlton Sprague, that "no one need be deterred from voting for Mr. Cleveland by moral considerations." Mr. Sprague is an able and excellent man, who goes home when his day's work is done and knows next to nothing about the habits of men given to "deeds of darkness," and he does not pretend to know whether Cleveland is a libertine or not.

The opinion of Bishop Huntington was also predicated on ignorance. It may be that another invitation to speak would elicit from him a different view of the Governor's character. There are many able and good men who are ignorant of Cleveland's vices and find it hard to believe him so vile, but you are too clear-sighted to judge a man innocent when reliable men bear witness to his guilt, merely because men are found who do not know anything about his offences.

But "a committee of sixteen gentlemen of Buffalo was appointed to search this matter to the bottom, and the substance of this report, as given by them, was that he is an upright man, leading a pure life, and it is absolutely impossible that such charges can be true." Who appointed the young men who composed that committee of sixteen? No one. Who did they represent? No one. How is their verdict regarded by sensible people in Buffalo? As a striking example of verbiage, recklessness and impudence. It was advertised over the land that more than 400 names would be subscribed to their document, including several clergymen, but only sixteen obscure men, mostly young lawyers, appeared. How much of their abundant assertion worth against positive proof? They are bold to declare that two clergymen here "have ventured to state as facts known to themselves, stories which rest upon the merest hearsay." Did you not owe it to your audience and to the public to whom you spoke to inquire of those clergymen whether this severe allegation is true? Abundant proof of its utter falseness unpleasant task of entering into details, which, however, are in our possession, and not as mere vague rumor, but in the form of positive and circumstantial statements by witnesses cognizant of that to which they testify."

I will give you two or three cases. A respectable and truthful woman occupies with her husband apartments in a business block. On the floor above her has for several years resided a "loud woman." Mr. Cleveland has been accustomed to visit that woman down to a recent date and remain to a late hour of the night. The woman first mentioned says she knows Cleveland well and cannot be mistaken in regard to these visits, and that she has more than once seen him helped down the stairs and led to his rooms when he was too drunk to walk without assistance.

Not far from Buffalo, at a railway station, resides a German woman with two daughters of bad repute. They keep a saloon in the small house in which they live. Mr. Cleveland, usually with a friend, has been accustomed for several years to visit and lodge in that house. There are two respectable hotels near, but he never lodges in either of them. The woman freely boasts of the money her visitors leave with her, and mentions with apparent delight the interest Cleveland takes in one of the daughters. Five years ago that daughter was married to a foolish fellow, and in ten weeks became a mother. Common repute charges Cleveland with being the father of the child. Since this event he has kept up his former intimacy with this same daughter. How do we know this to be true? Some of us have visited the place and taken the testimony of men who personally know of the facts stated; have often seen Cleveland there, have drank with him in the saloon, seen him too drunk to walk without help, and seen him give money to his favorite girl under circumstances clearly indicating that it was for no legitimate object. These witnesses include the station agent, a well-to-do and enterprising farmer and others.

The cases mentioned in my letter to Rev. Dr. Muller, found in The Boston Journal of the 3d inst., need not be repeated. Three clear-headed, upright business men stand ready to come into court and testify to the allegations in these cases whenever needed, and more than 30 persons are capable of doing the same from personal knowledge of the facts. It may be that such facts do not disgrace Cleveland, for he had sunk so deep in sin before they occurred that we can hardly imagine him lower, but these crimes, and several others held in reserve, and several too awful to bear relating, and several that involve families it would be cruel to expose, are more recent than eight or ten years ago. Physicians, lawyers, business men, worthy women personally cognizant of facts they relate, and personally known to us, have brought these terrible crimes to the knowledge of several of our pastors. We have had the aid of an able lawyer in sifting and summarizing the evidence and passing upon its validity. I call your attention to its grave significance. You have long been a bold and able teacher of righteousness, and it pains me and pains tens of thousands of the godly in our land to have you misled into indorsing and exalting a libertine to public favor. I speak with all the more earnestness because the wiles of this man have brought shame into my own flock of dear ones. The "young lawyers" tell you that clergymen cannot possibly have personal knowledge of such doings. Have we not tens of thousands of children and youth under our care? Do I not know how more than one out of the 400 in my own Sunday School have fallen victims to the lecheries of professional and public men? It makes my blood boil to think that a man who has thrust a dart of agony into hearts very near to me is now heralded by fellow ministers as worthy to be exalted to the highest office on earth. Disclosures that have recently come to my knowledge fill me with indignation and alarm. I pray you, my brother, to recall your indorsement of that bad man.

Very truly yours,

GEO. H. BALL.
