hard-breathing

by Jeri Therault

I walk the ends & starts of June breathe lilacs & salt-marsh car-spewed toxins last year's rumor of heat. somewhere factories unmake (still) lungs/back/hands like those boom-time pulp & loom hard-breathing jobs my ancestors proudly glad for sweat & strain the good work of their bodies inhaled dirt & weed-killer breathed smoke-stack & cigarettes
work-paid mortgage happy for over-time split-shift side-by-side father/son steady pay-check girl [my aunt] in the back room breathed cotton lint two decades all of them artists of their own lives like renaissance painters breathing/tasting lead white whitest of whites everlasting clapboard-white chipped sweet-smelling lead breathed pot roses & lavender cut grass & clover exhaled after-shift laughs & stories brothers father aunt with the excised lung in the too-small paid-for house everything earned with the work of dangerous breathing

 even now [somewhere] a grandfather & uncles water tomatoes re-shingle a roof play cribbage in the cool moth-soft near-dark breathe easy breathe what we've always breathed grief & goodness alveoli enfolding detritus & duff in delicate plackets pit-scarring like the wind-burned faces of far-gazing pioneers
