Beginning Thursday, March 19, all University of Maine System employees who, based on the nature of their work, are able to work remotely are being asked to work away from campus. Employees should work with their supervisor regarding arrangements and expectations. Employees who are required to continue to perform duties on campus will receive instructions from their respective supervisors.

Prohibiting Group Gatherings of Ten or More: The University of Maine System is also prohibiting group gatherings of ten or more people and banning all university-sponsored domestic travel with narrow exceptions for limited travel within Maine. The steps are being taken to protect student and employee health and help reduce the spread of the coronavirus.

Maine's public universities remain open for business and classes resume following spring break on March 25 with the transition of instruction to online and other appropriate distance modalities. The University of Maine School of Law resumes classes March 23.
