Cover Illustration: Our cover image is a postcard from the Society’s collections showing the entrance to Fort Preble. Built in South Portland in 1808, Fort Preble was one of several pork-barrel “Embargo forts” secured by Secretary of War Henry Dearborn to benefit his Democratic political allies in Maine. Historian Joshua Smith discusses the fort and others built in the same period along the coast of Maine. Our other authors, Howard Segal, Shannon Risk, and Michael Cohen, discuss political and community controversies surrounding other Maine institutions, both religious and secular: the Maine Yankee nuclear plant; Portland’s First Congregational Church, and its Congregation Shaarey Tphiloh. Ranging from the early nineteenth century to the late twentieth century, these controversies show that Maine people have not been shy about expressing their opinions on matters of consuming importance to their communities. The postcard was printed around 1906; Fort Preble was maintained and modernized through several wartime crises until 1950, when the facility was decommissioned and became Southern Maine Community College.
