Department of Communication and Journalism lecture discusses how to foster dialogues around race in the classroom

Abigail Martin

Follow this and additional works at: https://digitalcommons.library.umaine.edu/social_justice

Part of the Higher Education Commons, Race and Ethnicity Commons, and the United States History Commons

Repository Citation
Martin, Abigail, "Department of Communication and Journalism lecture discusses how to foster dialogues around race in the classroom" (2020). Social Justice: Diversity, Equity, & Inclusion. 86. https://digitalcommons.library.umaine.edu/social_justice/86

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by DigitalCommons@UMaine. It has been accepted for inclusion in Social Justice: Diversity, Equity, & Inclusion by an authorized administrator of DigitalCommons@UMaine. For more information, please contact um.library.technical.services@maine.edu.
Department of Communication and Journalism lecture discusses how to foster dialogues around race in the classroom

Photo by David Jakacky.

Abigail Martin

Campus & Community, Culture | October 26, 2020
On October 19, 2020, as part of the CMJ Fall 2020 Colloquium, Laura Rickard and the Department of Communication and Journalism here at the University of Maine held “Dialoguing About Race,” a lecture about race and the classroom. This lecture featured three women with inspiring backgrounds: Jaquel Eley, Amber Kennedy and Lauren Babb.

Eley, originally from Boston, Massachusetts and attending Albany State University, earned her master’s at UMaine. Kennedy graduated from UMaine with a bachelor’s in communications, went on to earn her master’s and now works in health and wellness. Babb is a current second-year Ph.D. student in chemistry.

The lecture brought to the audience’s attention that criticism can be fuel for growth and satisfaction in one’s life. “Dialoguing About Race” aimed to discuss the important topic of race within the context of education in a meaningful, inclusive way.

Beginning the lecture, Eley created a safe space for discussion by explaining that being singled out isn’t necessarily bad but can be empowering. She accomplished this by providing insight into a situation she experienced in middle school, setting the stage for proving that the experiences within the early years of education are impactful on people’s lives.

Babb continued the conversation by explaining that there are a variety of metrics to someone’s worth than just measured achievement, explaining how experiences shape one’s beliefs and levels of confidence. All of the speakers then touched on how opinions and facts differ, urging the audience to understand how interpretations may vary depending on who is measuring your achievement.

A guest chimed-in and brought to the viewers’ attention that the criticisms of one metric doesn’t mean failure, though it certainly is difficult to work through when the criticisms are the loudest voice in one’s life. It was then stressed that professors and parents establish that students have agency in the classroom.

A major part of the panel focused on how to discuss race within the classroom. Additionally, the panel spoke of what to do in a situation where blatant racism occurs in the classroom setting. Understanding that there may be subcontext to one’s racial beliefs that are unknown to their fellow students and even unknown to staff members is critical to a holistic approach to racial traumas.

“There isn’t a right way, but not addressing the issue is the wrong way,” Kennedy said.

Highlighting the importance of empathetic approaches by teachers, the hosts of the lecture addressed how to begin classroom discussions regarding race, determining that if staff members do not know how to open up the discussion of race and racism, the best, most valuable thing they can do, is at least acknowledge that inequity is there.

Additionally, staff members must acknowledge that the perspective and facts about race are important because that allows for students to feel like real people in the classroom, allowing for students to feel more comfortable and enabling this dialogue in the future.

If one wants to find information for similar events that may be happening within the upcoming weeks or months, one can do so by finding the Calendar tab on the University of Maine website. Once one is at the calendar tab, click “Online Events.” At this point, you may further refine the search. To find this particular lecture, further direct oneself to “Conferences and Workshops” within the “Faculty and Staff Development” dropdown.
ALSO ON THE MAINECAMPUS

Police Beat – The Maine Campus
4 months ago • 1 comment
Sept. 2 At 6:40 p.m. Elena Maturo of Orono, 19, was found to be in possession …

The judicial nomination, and …
4 months ago • 1 comment
On June 22, 1993, Justice Ruth Bader Ginsberg, who had been serving on the …

UMaine community awaits name …
3 months ago • 1 comment
Little Hall is without a doubt the most controversial building on the University …

Russia’s i influence
4 months ago
On Sunday, Alexander the 2020 Be

What do you think?
0 Responses

👍 Upvote 😊 Funny 😍 Love 😲 Surprised 😞 Angry 😞 Sad

The MaineCampus Comment Policy
Please read our Comment Policy before commenting.

0 Comments The MaineCampus Disqus’ Privacy Policy
Login

Sort by Best

Start the discussion

Maine Campus

5738 Memorial Union, Room 131
Orono, Maine 04469-5738

207-581-1273
info@mainecampus.com

Recent Posts

UMaine women’s hockey sweeps, men’s splits in weekend series against New Hampshire

Categories

Select Category

© Copyright 2017-2019. Maine Campus. All Rights Reserved.