UMaine researchers co-author opinion published by Centralmaine.com

October 7, 2020

Ryan LaRochelle, University of Maine lecturer at the Cohen Institute for Leadership and Public Service, Rob Glover, associate professor of political science, and Brienne Berry, Ph.D. candidate in anthropology contributed to an opinion published by Centralmaine.com. In the column, "What's at Stake in the November Election," LaRochelle and Glover expressed perspectives from the Scholar Strategies Network related to the disproportionate impact of coronavirus on vulnerable populations, and the opportunity presented in the November election. Berry argued that now is the time for Maine to develop regional solutions to address climate change. Retired Professor of Sociology Steve Barkan also contributed to the piece.
