Biographical / Historical

---

The material in this record group mostly relate to the construction of the new zoology building on the University of Maine campus in 1966. The building was named Murray Hall in honor of former professor of zoology and Dean of College of Arts and Sciences Joseph M. Murray (1937-1941). The Architects used to design the building were Wadsworth, Boston, Dimick, Mercer & Weatherill. At the time of the construction Kenneth W. Allen was department chair (1963-1973), Allen would later be appointed acting University of Maine president (1979-1980).

While degrees in zoology are still offered by the University of Maine's Department of Biology and Ecology the separate zoology department was closed in 1990 with James D. McCleave its last chair.

Scope and Contents

---

The records contain textual information created by and pertaining to the Department of Zoology including information that deals with graduate's physiology project greenhouse renovation, where there is grant proposals, acceptance of the grant and plans to go forth with the project. In particular, one of the graduate students is deciding on whether to conduct an experiment on the reproductive cycle of Strongylocentrotus drobachiensis (sea urchin) with an emphasis on temperature and salinity effects or Echinarachnius Parma. Another major project discussed is where a new zoology building would be produced. Like the graduate greenhouse renovation project, the new Zoology department building files include information about plans, grant proposals and correspondence among state and University people. There are also other documents that discuss, recommendations to the graduate greenhouse renovation, clippings of grant approval, and the layout plans that the projects involved.
