John Calvin Stevens
DOMESTIC ARCHITECTURE
1890-1930

By John Calvin Stevens II & Earle G. Shettleworth, Jr.

By 1890 architect John Calvin Stevens of Portland had achieved a national reputation for his work in the Shingle Style. This book explores the next four decades of his domestic architecture, an eclectic period in which he and his son John Howard Stevens designed houses ranging from Craftsman and Prairie School summer cottages to Colonial Revival mansions. Forty-seven of these distinctive homes are illustrated by 135 professionally taken period photographs. John Calvin Stevens II authored the biographical essay about his grandfather, and Earle G. Shettleworth, Jr. has provided a description of each house. In both illustrations and text, John Calvin Stevens: Domestic Architecture, 1890-1930 presents new insights into the career of one of Maine's most talented architects.

224 pages, 141 illustrations, printed on acid-free paper, Smyth-sewn, soft bound. Designed by Mahan Graphics.

Available for $34.95 plus $2.00 shipping fee (Maine residents add $1.75 sales tax).

hard times, hard men

Maine and the Irish, 1830–1860

BY JAMES H. MUNDY

Foreword by Congressman Joseph E. Brennan

“A fanatic is a man that does what he thinks the Lord wud do if only he knew th’ facts iv th’ case,” said Mr. Dooley.

Maine in the 1850s was full of men who fit that description. Neal Dow wanted to separate the lower classes from their rum. Itinerant street preachers railed against the “Whore of Babylon.” Ned Buntline referred to the government in Augusta as “stinking and shining like rotten mackerel by moonlight.” Know Nothing mobs burned Catholic churches and thousands in Bangor marched to the glare of torches and flaming tar barrels to intimidate Irish Democrats and elect Republican candidates. In hard times, hard men, James H. Mundy presents a vivid portrait of this fascinating period in Maine history.

224 pages with 3 maps, 40 illustrations, bibliography, and index. Printed on acid-free paper, sewn hardcover binding, dust jacket. $29.95 plus $2 shipping (Maine residents add $1.50 sales tax).
