Barry Goldwater tells of plans to contest Arizona Senate seat

Barry Goldwater, undoubtedly one of the most controversial leaders in the country today, addressed Maine students Sunday evening, October 1, in the Memorial Gym. His talk, entitled "Conservatism in America," dealt with a range of current issues, from youth's participation in government to the antiballistic missile system.

The former senator and 1964 presidential candidate also revealed his plans for entering the 1968 senatorial race in Arizona while this news came not as a particular bit of revealing disclosure, general audience reaction was one of surprise. Mr. Goldwater has not yet formally announced his candidacy for incumbent Senator Hayden's seat but answered, "I'm planning on it," to a query concerning this possibility.

In response to a question concerning the function and usefulness of civilian organizations, particularly the Free Enterprise Act (1958) that prevented one from receiving federal funds for the teaching of theology, as a sign. Goldwater concede a definite place to "true liberalism" and observed that the liberal approach of Jefferson is "the liberal approach of Jefferson," that Reagan has predicted that we will see more true conservatism and true liberalism working together, "heading down the same path."

The national debt appears to be of utmost concern to Goldwater. He calls for an end to "massive deficit spending" in order to insure a favorable trade relationship, among other reasons. When asked about the 10% surtax, he stated that he wished President Johnson had raised taxes last year. Mr. Goldwater is worried about a future shortage in the near future and insists that cutting federal spending is the only answer.

Our chief problem is, as Goldwater sees it, the increase of crime and "old-fashioned anarchy" in the cities. He says that the young of America must grow up to oppose what guarded. He does not know "where in the devil" the Republican leadership is. Excepting Reagan, he did not appear impressed with any of the leading candidates. The speaker was vague about Romney's chances, but would, in spite of the "personal rift" between them, support the national ticket if Michigan's governor were nominated.

Barry Goldwater noted the rapidly rising popularity of Ronald Reagan, assuring Mr. Agnew that he assured him he "does not want to run and will not run." If the demand for him is not met, he believes it is not, Mr. Goldwater says, "close the door."

Goldwater looks to the outcome of the New Hampshire and Wisconsin primaries for the most likely nominee. The speaker devoted a large segment of his speech to a personal segment of his speech to a personal definition of conservatism. "Progress must be made on the proven values of the past," he said. A conservative, according to Goldwater does not try things shown disastrous in the past. He learns from experience.

Mr. Goldwater advises a new look at liberalism in this country. He feels that the liberals are some-Carnegie opens its doors for view of the renovated exhibition galleries

by Maggie O'Brien

October 8th, 1:00-5:00 p.m., an open house will be held in Carnegie Hall, the public is invited to view the $150,000 renovations recently completed in Carnegie, home of the University of Maine Art Department.

Renovations, designed by Old Town architect Cooper Milliken, have improved exhibition galleries, drawing rooms, painting studios, workshops, and offices.

The stone steps of Carnegie's main entrance now lead to a bronze-framed glass doorway, which, in turn, introduces a two-story high, mahogany-finished lobby. A glass-enclosed stairwell ascends from the first floor lobby to the second level. There are five renovated exhibition rooms, Gallery One, on the first floor, and Gallery Two, on the second, display walls covered by oyster-white acrilon fiber, modern adjustable lighting systems, and metal grid ceilings from which exhibits may be hung. The exhibit space in the Print Room and the Seminar Room, both on the second floor, is slightly sunken into blonde wood paneled walls. A Student Gallery in the basement has also been redone. Drawing rooms, studios, and offices have been painted and paneled. Classroom walls sport spacious white blackboards.

These alterations are the first major improvements made in Carnegie Hall since its construction in 1906. The building, one of more than 2,000 university libraries donated by Andrew Carnegie, housed the University of Maine Library for 43 years. In 1949, Carnegie Hall became co-inhabited by the Art and Music Departments. After an appropriation of $35,200 from the Higher Education Facilities Act of 1963, and the Music Department's departure to Lord Hall in 1965, the old unstable glass dome crowning Carnegie was removed, and renovations have architecturally uplifted the Art Department's interior.

The Patrons of Fine Arts are sponsoring the Sunday afternoon opening. A Saturday evening preview of the new Carnegie Hall has been arranged for Dr. and Mrs. E. Young, University trustees, and special guests; the preview is a black-tie affair, closed to the public.

NOTICE
The Medical Service Club will meet Wednesday Evening, October 11, in the Low Room, Captain McLaughlin, USN, will speak on post-graduate programs in medicine and allied fields available through the U. S. Navy. Anxious students judge the startling alterations in Carnegie Hall, before the official re-opening on October 8th. The glass-enclosed stairwell is one of the imaginative features of the "new" Art building.

The Mrs. Maine Club is sponsoring the Well Baby Clinic again this year. Physicians and all immunizations are offered. Only children of University of Maine students up to age ten are eligible for care. The clinic will be held the second Saturday of every month from October to May. Dr. Edward Hughes, Jr., a Pediatrician from Bangor, is the Physician in attendance and Carol Young, the clinic Nurse. The clinic hours are 1:30-3:00 p.m. at rooms 107 and 108 Boardman Hall. All children must have an appointment. To obtain one, call Linda Sanborn at Orono 866-4184.

NOTICE
The Students Society is holding a fund-raising dance, October 9, in the F.F.A. room of the Old Town Vocational School. Tickets are $1.00. Music will be provided by The Vibes. For reservations, see Linda Triche, Grade 10.

The Subject was Plays after it appeared on Broadway in 1964.

Eugene O'Neill's autobiographical play, Long Day's Journey Into Night, will be presented in March. Under the direction of Dr. James Bost, this play promises to be the climax of the new University ETV stations each Tuesday at 6:15 p.m., beginning October 3.

In the first 15-minute edition there will be an interview with former U.S. Senator Barry Goldwater, recent visitor to the University campus. Other programs will include: The Class of '71; an analysis of the problems of international relations; and an educational theater. Though the programs are not intended for students, the University ETV stations each Tuesday at 6:15 p.m., beginning October 3.

The final production of the season will lend some variety. The Insect Comedy by Karel and Josef Chapek will be produced by Neil Fentor. The Insect Comedy is a satire on the stupidity and greed of man.

At times it seems that the Maine Masque considers its first duty to be an educational theater. Though some may regret this, no one who appreciates good drama will complain if the Masque gives us viable productions of the exceptional works. Some may complain, however, of the unbalanced season. Last year was as extremely light as this year is serious. In general, it may be said that this year's theater season will be highly dramatic, intensely emotional, and slightly Irish.

In answer to the need for practical experience in television production, students at the University of Maine have embarked on a special project which will result in a weekly television program. Maine City College Report, to be seen on University ETV stations each Tuesday at 6:15 p.m., beginning October 3.

The serious-minded theater goer who cherishes the memory of the first acts more hilarious than most comedies may look forward to a brilliant season. Only O'Casey has made the first acts intense; other playwrights have only a memory of the first acts. Only O'Casey has made the first acts intense; other playwrights have only a memory of the first acts.

The god in the Palm Beach suit, or — to that image!

A personal political role is rather like a holy man. Again and again the sacred mediums, television and the press, have conveyed to us those spectacles, that thin, that nose, that smile — that image. Our feelings toward the man are irrelevant; the sacred mediums have endowed him with something approaching holiness. We are awed by the thought of all that energy devoted to just one individual — all those millions of people who love him or hate him, all those airwaves that hum with his voice, all those great roaring presses that spit out his image. So is it that when he appears as a man in the living flesh we feel ourselves to be in the presence of a sort of sanctity.

This was the feeling inside the Memorial Union Trophy Room fifteen minutes before Barry Goldwater was scheduled to speak last Sunday night. There were perhaps little more than a dozen of us and as thousands streamed by outside, we waited in nervous and expectant silence for the Great Man to arrive to grant us a few minutes of his time.

Suddenly the door swung open and surrounded by a couple of University officials — those spectacles, that thin, that nose, that smile! We pressed nervously about the demi-god praying subconsciously that some minor flaw—a loose necktie, a slip hem showing, a wild strand of hair—wouldn't be noticed by and annoy the Great Man. The Great Man shook hands all around and told an anecdote or two to make us more comfortable and reassure us that he, too, was one of us. Still, we asked the first question with something of the absolute trust of the faithful consulting at an oracle.

"Senator, do you think that the present generation—our generation—is more radical or more conservative?"

"Well," said the Great Man, "or so we approximate him, "I think that today's kids are far more on the ball. I'm all for it, too. They're working on getting the vantage age in my home state—Arizona—to 25. I feel more at home with these young kids. Peggy and I have raised a few ourselves, you know. ..."

The Senator rambled on another minute or two on why precisely he thought the present generation was more radical—or maybe it was why he thought they were more conservative; it was difficult, in fact, to figure out what precisely he did decide. By the end of the second question we were a bit disillusioned with our demi-god: he was either giving us the word in a most incrustable fashion or else he just wasn't giving us anything.

The rest of the interview and the subsequent speeches completely disillusioned. We were regaled with jokes. We were treated to a couple of more anecdotes and even some small virettes on Goldwater family life. The most serious part of the speech was a rather simplistic polemic about how there's us, see, and then there's THEM, you got that, and even though US Americans cannot stand to see anybody suffer in any part of the world, you better watch out and stop telling our generals what to do because they know better than anyone what to do. Otherwise, see. THEY are going to take over and they'll make us see something to be a second-rate economic power which will, of course, be the blackest period in human history.

At the end of the speech about three thousand people hooped to their feet and smacked their hands violently together in honor of the Great Man. We didn't wish to be boorish nor do we wish to incur ugly looks so we, too, dutifully stood up and applauded, but our disillusionment was complete. Up on the podium under the glare of the floodlights stood no more than a dozen people, standing there in his conservative view Palm Beach suit and pearly grey necktie was a good enough sort of man—a man of integrity, courage, and energy without doubt, but also a simple uneducated man with a hankering for power which three years ago might have spelt disaster for the world. In little more than an hour the image had come unwarmed from the man and had vaporized. The Emperor stood under the floodlights without any clothes.

—PSTT

Can the two be combined by better coordination between autonomous groups on campus? Student, faculty, and public support of last Sunday's lecture seems to indicate that they can. With student enthusiasm in the worth of a stimulating lecture series, we hope that the Political Lyceum Committee can execute what they have so admirably started.

Maine campus — seems to have been based largely on the division of funds available by the number of speakers wanted. From an economic standpoint only, there's more than a slight likelihood that some minor inconvenience might have spelt disaster for the world. In little more than an hour the image had come unwarmed from the man and had vaporized.

The Emperor stood under the floodlights without any clothes.

The Variations of a Tone —

by Michele Montas

Mr. Goldwater's speech last Sunday night was seemingly an overwhelming success. In his address to the student body, Mr. Goldwater briefly summarized his general outlook: "Your job is to prove to the world that our way of life, our philosophy of life, of government, in business is so far superior to anything we have ever seen or heard of that it's better to our way..." in business, so far superior to "that (only ignorance) can, a waysey, keep another nation from following America's perfect righteousness."

Wasn't the Russians starting to realize that "they live like pigs?" Aren't they starting to become capitalists? For Mr. Goldwater, this is not a question, it is an absolute certainty. Here, the former senator seems to reflect the naive attitude so popular in American mass media of the "good guy" and the disgusting "bad guy." "Americans are not going to see people suffer; it's not in their nature!" asserts our speaker.

For Mr. Goldwater, this attitude is worsened by an acute case of "Americanomor- phism," in inability to view another country in that country's own terms. The U.S.A. "protector of Freedom and Peace" feels compelled to export this "Freedom" whose monopoly it no doubt holds.

The general oversimplifications of Mr. Goldwater's speech seems to be due only partly to a lack of time; it seems rather a natural extension of his 1964 campaign. In the question-answer period that followed, the former senator reduced the racial problem to a "desire for anonymity" and the world's problem to "Communism Aggression." Few people in the audience raised even an eyebrow. Mr. Goldwater's voice was pleasant. His answers were so clear that only a small minority questioned the unfortunately scarce facts he mentioned. These facts fit so perfectly his previous positions that nobody frowns when he says that "only black people are wrong." We feel wonderfully "right."

Does it matter after all if facts are wrong? Does it matter if so much is brought down to a black and white tone? The mind is at ease and we feel wonderfully "right."

The objective, the purpose of the course was undertaken.

To the Editor:
Unfortunately, my comments in last week's Campus may have given an impression which I do not wish to convey. Although there were those professors who did not wish their courses to be evaluated, this was their choice and a valid one.

Considering the spirit of academic freedom under which the project was undertaken.

With very few exceptions, I found the faculty extremely cooperative, and sincerely so. It is this sincerity which we must applaud.

Two of the first white men that set foot in Old Town in 1781 were Ira Pierce and Ira Wadleigh.

Ira Wadleigh built the first sawmill in this area back when Bangor was in its heyday and the Lumbering Capital of the World.

Being a lumberman he was, of course, a friend of Paul Bunyan. Paul would come to Ira's sawmill for lunch and dinner many times and this presented many problems because Paul loved to eat, and especially hamburgers. Meat in those days was hard to come by and Paul would eat 40 to 50 hamburgers at a single meal.

This would clean Ira out of meat but he wouldn't say anything to Paul because of their friendship, so Ira had to devise something to save meat and keep Paul full.

Vegetables were as plentiful as was homemade bread and rolls, so Ira took a larger hamburger, added lettuce, tomatoes and onions, between a homemade roll, held it together with catsup and mayonnaise and called it a Jumbo. It delighted Paul and Ira too because now Paul only ate a dozen or so of the new "Jumbos".

Today, 150 years later, this exact same "Jumbo" can be bought at the Governor's Drive-In located in Stillwater and owned by Ira Wadleigh's Great, Great Grandson Leith Wadleigh.

Dates announced for annual National Teacher Examination

College seniors preparing to teach school may take the National Teacher Examinations on any of the three different test dates announced today by Educational Testing Service, a nonprofit educational organization which prepares and administers this testing program. New dates for the testing of prospective teachers are: February 3, April 6, and July 6, 1968. The tests will be given at nearly 500 locations throughout the United States,ETS said.

Results of the National Teacher Examinations are used by many large school districts as one of several factors in the selection of new teachers and by several states for certification or licensing of teachers. Some colleges also require all seniors preparing to teach to take the examinations. On each full day of testing, prospective teachers may take the Common Examinations, which measure the professional preparation and general cultural background of teachers, and one of 13 Teaching Area Examinations which measure mastery of the subject they expect to teach.

Prospective teachers should contact their school systems in which they seek employment, or their college, for specific advice on which examinations to take and on which dates they should be taken. A Bulletin of Information containing a list of test centers, and information about the examinations, as well as a Registration Form, may be obtained from college placement officers, school personnel departments, or directly from National Teacher Examinations, Box 911, Educational Testing Service, Princeton, New Jersey 08540.

We at the University of Maine have our problems — cafeteria food, a dry campus, closing time, one hallow tree, flooded cellars, and a number of other grievances for spare time thought. It certainly is rough life and there are times when we wonder if we will ever make it. Most of us do, but not without a few grums and groans along the way.

We are well aware of the perennial problems facing us, but they are not as unique as we might think. Campuses all over the United States have the same problems and are also trying to solve them.

The big issue of birth control hit the BU NEWS front page when one of its students felt that action, instead of talk, was needed to start a movement for free birth control information and devices. The NEWS reports that at a lecture the student demonstrated various birth control devices and commented on the use of each. Following the demonstration, he asked if any student desired to receive birth control devices. Approximately 20, mostly girls, approached the stage and several were given contraceptives.

He was later arrested and charged with breaking three sections of the 'Massachusetts' 'crimes against charity' law which could cost him ten years of his life.

The incident touched off a storm of controversy and the school was forced to take a stand on the issue. Vice-president for Student Affairs, J. Wendell Yon, wrote: "I am sure then that some persons advocate dissemination of such information and devices to all persons, upon request, regardless of their age, but Massachusetts law permits such dissemination by a registered physician and certain others legally designated, to married persons only."

Coed-living off campus gaining in popularity

According to a magazine article, published today, college living habits have changed drastically over the past few years. On campuses throughout the U.S. boys and girls, in ever increasing numbers, are living together as couples. This is reported in the September "back-to-college" issue of Esquire where for the first time in any major magazine four campus couples are photographed in the homes where they live openly together. The four couples in the feature are from Harvard, Cornell, Michigan, and Berkeley.

In Cambridge, Mass. for instance, a Radcliffe coed, 26, moved off-campus with a Harvard student. The parents who know made no objection: Harvard didn't seem to care and Radcliffe, because the coed was officially in residence at one of the dorms, didn't know. Esquire reports the Harvard student as saying: "About a third of our friends are married, another third live together, and the rest, well, still looking for each other."

Another couple, living two blocks off-campus of the University of Michigan, share duties: "Responsibilities with another woman," they are in a six-room apartment in Ann Arbor. Like most college couples, Esquire finds they have a casual relationship and is not a real marriage. The magazine in its report on the new roommates, recalls that the traditional college roommate always had to be furtive and bashful and bashful chosen by a sadistic dean of admissions. If one tried to sleep, he snored; if one attempted to study, he was interrupted, and by the end of the year a person really learned how to hate.

Today, the love generation is apparently changing all this. As the Cornell students put it, neither knows how they will live under the same roof: marriage is only one of many possibilities.

Massachusetts law answers the birth control question for BU now, but I wonder what their answers will be if future legislation does not protect them so well?

At the University of West Virginia, there has been a big controversy as to whether birth control should be served in their new student union, the Mountain Lair. It is legal for the students to drink on the campus as the drinking age is 18.

Pros and cons were discussed at a recent Student Cabinet meeting in hopes of getting varying points of view on the issue.

Their head football coach, Carlen, said, "I am wholly against it and do not feel the college campus is the place for beer." He further stated, "We have a sick student body if they cannot use the Lair if beer is served." Bob McWhorter, Mountainlair director, has not taken a definite stand on the issue feeling that all aspects ought to be weighed before making any decisions. He did say, "Restricting temptation is not the adult approach."

He cited other schools where drinking was permitted in the student union, 'drinking problems on these campuses are less than on supposedly dry campuses.'

Carlen commented, "If you put it in the Lair, put it everywhere — even vending machines. There is no reason to set a double standard." (How about that idea for Maine?)

Carlen also warned the cabinet that the faculty must take a stand now for the issue would be the first to complain when an intoxicated student reported to one of their classes.

Although Maine can hardly cope with the thought of drinking off campus — let alone the Den — who knows what the next few years will bring?
Mr. Goldwater advises a new look at liberalism in this country. He feels that the liberals embrace the basic communist tenet—from each according to his ability, to each according to his needs.

Senator Percy deems Viet victory impossible for U.S.

Senator Charles Percy (Rep., Ill.) speaking on National Educational Television's "Regional Report," says it is impossible for the United States to win a military victory in Vietnam. The program, in which the Senator made the statement, was seen on Wednesday, September 27 at 9 p.m. over all Maine ETV stations.

In the recorded interview with columnist Jack Mahley of Chicago's A. merican, Percy calls on the Johnson administration to devise a plan which would allow the North Vietnamese to come to the bargaining table "without losing face." The freshman senator de nies any presidential aspiration despite the fact that he is being praised as one of the "most likely" to run for the ticket in 1964 which would allow him to make a go of it.

The re-opening of Carnegie Hall on October 8th marks the opening of a permanent "Artists of Maine" Exhibition in Carnegie Hall. John Collins, Stephen Howard, Bernard Langlais, Leo Meissner, John Meech, F.W. Saunders, Laurence Sisson, a total of sixty artists living and/or working in Maine will display representative work in this constantly changing, continuous exhibit. "The artists themselves," says Prof. Vincent A. Hargen, Head of the A.I. Department, "will keep fresh works before the public, making it the only gallery in the state where residents and tourists will be able to see a cross-section of the distinguished art of Maine."

The Patrons of Fine Arts, individuals lending financial assistance to cultural programs at Carnegie Hall, are sponsoring the year-round "Artists of Maine" gallery. Mrs. Alexander B. Cutler, a Patron of Old Town, will act as daily host and curator for the exhibition.

Though arranged in both Gal- lery One and Gallery Two for the weekend open house, the "Artists of Maine" exhibit will permanently reside in Gallery Two, Carnegie Hall.

There are eight additional art exhibits to be displayed on Campus through the month of October. On October 15th, Gallery One of Carnegie Hall will open an exhibition of paintings and collages by Denny Winters. Fred and Mary Preble will exhibit paintings in the Lobby of Hauck Auditorium; Merrit Murzey will display lithographs and drawings in the Lobby of Alumni Hall. The Seminar Room of Carnegie Hall will host "As Maine Goes," photos by John McKee.

Four of the September art ex- hibits will remain on campus during October. The Hans Erni graphics display in the Print Room of Carnegie Hall will remain open, "One Year in a Maine Town", a selection of photos by Evelyn Miles, will occupy the Photo Salon of Fogler Library. The Oaks Room of the Library will hold the Fritz Eichenberg wood engravings for another month. Leo Chabor's "Face of Maine" photo- graphic display will be removed from the Memorial Union Lobby on October 15th.

Carnegie Hall is open weekdays 9:00 a.m. to 5 p.m., and on Saturdays 9:00 a.m. to 12:00 noon. Other galleries are open during respective building hours.

STATE POLICE CADETS
will start in training

A capacity class of 34 trooper candidates will commence a 12-week period of training Monday (Oct. 2) at the 25th session of the Maine State Police Academy.
The Cadet troopers, including 13 provided by the last session of the Legislature, will undergo 1,000 hours of classroom instruction and practical work in the techniques of law enforcement.
The training will be conducted by Maine State Police personnel and specialists from other law enforcement agencies and related professions at Camp Keyes in Augusta.
Successful completion of the session and a two-year probationary period will qualify the candidates for permanent status as troopers.
Most of the new troopers after graduation will be assigned to bolster State Police coverage of the rural sections of Maine, Colonel Parker F. Hennessey said. Eight of the new men will be assigned to Troop G to cover the new section of Interstate 95 opening in northern Maine this fall.

Mr. James Turner
President, General Student Senate
Dear Jim,
As you already know, I am resigning from the Vice Presidency of the Student Senate.
After last spring's election, I was unexpectedly accepted for a year's study at McGill University in Montreal. Having previously discussed McGill with a number of professors in my department, I knew I couldn't bypass this opportunity. So, regretfully, I must suspend my Senate activities until I return to Orono for my senior year.
In closing let me wish you, the committee co-ordinators, the entire Senate, and most of all the new Vice President the best of luck in the upcoming year.
Sincerely yours,
James E. Tierney

The varsity soccer picture "is brightening" according to Coach Bill Livesey as he prepares his team for its home opener Saturday at 10 a.m. Fortunately this year's team has enough depth so that Coach Livesey can substitute frequently.

The Future of Soccer Team Bright, quotes Livesey

by Russ Potter

"This is the year our soccer team opens its season," a piano teacher, responding to a musical performance, said. "The soccer picture at Maine is brightening." Coach Bill Livesey precisions. The team's overall performance in pre-season scrimmages has been encouraging. Although its defense has faltered at times, the team's offense has demonstrated the ability to score.

"Our big aim for the season is to improve our offense to take the pressure off the defense," Coach Livesey points out. "Last year a lot of goals were scored against us, not because we were so weak on defense, but because we were on defense as much as three-quarters of some games."

Saturday's probable starting lineup should consist of team captain Ken Olsen, who has been very impressive as goalie, with backs, Harry Dame, Tom Miller, Ed Ainsworth, Harrie Price and Darryl Calkins. Gary Balzano, SWATULANI Munthali, Bob Hatch, Ahmed Hamid and George Pratt should get the starting call as forwards.

This year's team has enough depth so that Coach Livesey plans substituting frequently.

Coach Livesey cited Calkins, Price, Munthali and Hamid as looking impressive in the scrimmages. He added that everyone has done even better than he had hoped.

On Tuesday the varsity soccer team will travel to Brunswick to take on Sue Series rival, Bowdoin.

The freshman soccer team, which contains some promising talent, opened its season October 2 against the Bates JV's. Saturday, October 7, the freshmen will tangle with a team from Thomas College and on October 11 they meet the Hinckley School.

Immunity in Canada:

Draft dodgers go north

Toronto (CPS) -- With the draft quotas in this country on the increase, more and more conscientious objectors are seeking immunity in Canada.

What makes Canada so attractive to the prospective draft dodger? The dominant factor is the Canadian legal attitude toward the dodger. Canada's armed services are manned by volunteers, and Canada does not recognize "draft evasion" or "international flight to avoid prosecution" as crimes. Consequently, draft evaders cannot be extradited.

Tom Kent, chief civil servant of the Department of Citizenship and Immigration has put it quite plainly: "There is not any prohibition in the Immigration Act or regulations against the admission of persons who may be seeking to avoid induction into the armed services and, therefore, providing they meet immigration requirements, we have no basis in law for barring their entry."

Asked about American efforts to prosecute draft resisters, External Affairs Minister Paul Martin said that Canada does not "feel under any obligation to enforce the laws in that regard of any country."

Other attractions are the social and economic conditions in the Canadian Provinces. Since Canada has a chronic shortage of skilled labor, employers welcome Americans, who are generally better educated and trained than other immigrants or Canadians. Draft evaders report little, difficulty in finding jobs, and none have had more than occasional friction with Canadians who object to their presence.

With a way of life that is only marginally different from the U.S., the process of transition is minimal. Canadians have mixed feelings about the war, with a bare majority seeming to be opposed to the American war. This split makes acceptance of the American objector easier.

Any student admitted to a reputable Canadian school and having the money to pay for it may enter Canada on a "student entry certificate" which allows him to work during the summer and become a landed immigrant without having to apply for a landed immigrant by filling in the appropriate forms from the Department of Citizenship and Immigration and either mailing them to Ottawa, the capital, or presenting them at a border when he enters Canada. Visitors who have not filled out these forms are not allowed to work.

Any health, honest young man with either a job offer or enough money to survive on is likely to be admitted. Newspapers in Canada have from time-to-time commented that the certification is a pretty good guarantee of the quality of an immigrant.

Dartmouth sailors take NNEC, UMaine second

by D. A. Steward

The Maine Sailing Team finished second behind Dartmouth, 67-63, in the Northern New England Championship, held at Pushaw Pond Saturday, September 30. Colby managed to show with 59 points, Middlebury, Bowdoin and UNH also completed, finishing in that order.

Karl Webster, coach of last year's champion Bear sailing team, said of Dartmouth, "They have a strong team and led most of the way."

The 12 race-regattas lasted from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. with no breaks. It rained intermittently, but there were no spills. Each school was represented by 2 teams, each consisting of a skipper and a crew member. J. Russell Duym and William Scott were the two Maine skippers, Pete Thompson and Edward Smith, the crew members.

The teams raced alternately, usually sailing each of the 6 boats used for competition. One point was awarded for starting, one for finishing, and one for every boat beaten.

When asked about the chances of winning the Bowdoin Quadrangular Meet this coming weekend, Webster said, "We should have no trouble taking second place, but Tufts is going to be awfully hard to handle . . . they have one of the strongest teams in New England. Still we will give them a run for their money."

Tufts takes sailing seriously, with some Economics major, Sharon Bly, a junior from South Natick, supporting the Bears by driving, and one for every boat beaten.

There will be a Physics Colloquium, Friday, October 6 at 4:10 p.m. in room 141 Bennett Hall. Gordon C. Whitten, whose topic is "Pie 1 Physics", is the speaker. The Colloquium is open to the public.

As the president's credibility was called into question, we were in the midst of a war in which the "credibility" of the President was shaken. In reality, as it was by the Marseilles Cord, war was cease-fire. The excuse for escalation was a lie. We were in the presence of 4,000 Cers penetrating...
