Perfect weather marked commencement, class day

Dr. Robert B. Thomson received the Distinguished Maine Professor (Bacheelor Award) from President F. Kennedy and Lyndon B. Johnson. The generation gap—so much discussed by the nation at large—is a pretty good indication of how you'll react to the 'outside world.' To me, this gap within my own generation is perhaps one of the major arguments for the emphasis on fraternity and sorority life. If you are to be an effective leader, you must be a leader. In the army commissioning service I have seen the program grow from a few company commanders in the fall semester, 1967, to nearly 5,000 lieutenant colonels today. You are not two straight lines which diverge from a middle point of common thought and purpose. We are different, we have different interests and we will always have our differences. There are no easy answers, and there are no greater than the one of yesterday. Having a healthy gap between student and faculty at Columbia University from 1947-50, I have noticed that the students are the best teachers. They are the ones who will show you the unofficial curriculum of the university. We are different, we will always be different, and there will always be a gap in life's Golden Way. Hughes challenged

The letter writers state that "some students are going around the campus now saying this is the way to prevent the troubles." They suggest:
1. Fink out of college somewhere.
2. Get low grades.
3. Get elected president of the Student Government.
4. The Council then approves you without bothering to discuss the merits.

In partial response to the letter, Hughes said he is in the process of applying to law school in Portland, but he will have to wait until the results of his entrance examinations, which will be taken in August, before knowing if he will be accepted.

Hughes, who is planning to leave for a vacation in Europe, July 6, added that some of the information in the letter is true and some is quite untrue, and that it is just a "last gasp" attempt by some people jealous of his nomination.

Trustees vote to curtail new enrollments for 1970

More than 300 applicants for admission to Orono have been turned down, according to director of admissions, Curtis James A. Harmon, director of admissions, announced.

At the first time at Aroostook State College in 50 years, and at Orono, more than 300 applicants for admission have been turned down, according to director of admissions, Curtis A. Harmon, director of admissions for the State of Maine Board of Higher Education.

The University of Maine Board of Trustees met Monday night to vote on new enrollments for 1970.

Trustees were told that students already accepted for next fall might be diverted to other institutions, and that further reductions in the budget may be necessary.

The letter expresses added opposition to the use of "all printed matter" in the United States to cover the 1970 elections, which was signed "The Maine Times, published specifically for the:t.

The authors pointed out that Hughes had been "successful" in his attempts to have the university's budget reduced, and that he had been "successful" in his efforts to have the school's budget reduced.

Hughes hit by "sour grapes"

One of the many controversial issues which have hit the University of Maine within the last six weeks has been the nomination of Stephen T. Hughes to the UM Board of Trustees. It is reasonable that students and other people interested in the University would have diverse opinions supporting and opposing this appointment.

Most of the people who have opposed the appointment have openly identified themselves and stated their reasons as to why they believe Hughes should not be a trustee. Some feel that Hughes has been working within the context of the UM student government organizations only to enhance his own political goals. Others have indicated their disagreement of the way that Hughes has played the Student Senate into power roles formerly held by the class officers and organizations such as the AWS and the AFC. Some people, who have thrown the usual political dirt at Hughes have not wanted to identify themselves with the more or less organized opposition. Another group of opponents has chosen the tactic of hiding behind a larger group of students to give weight to their dissenting opinions.

The young ladie(s) who sent a letter signed "The Residents of Hart Hall" to the Maine Times, the Governor, and Executive Councilman Walter Cameron seem to pursue the letter course of political opposition.

The letter contains the information that Hughes flunked out of Duke University two different times, and that he graduated "somewhere" in the 500's of "1200' UM graduates.

Needless to say, the signature implies that all, or at least a majority, of the Hart Hall residents supported the letter. A few phone calls, however, have shown that, many have, in fact, opposed the letter. Some people, who have thrown the usual political dirt at Hughes, have not wanted to identify themselves with the more or less organized opposition. Another group of opponents has chosen the tactic of hiding behind a larger group of students to give weight to their dissenting opinions.

There is also a question as to where the letter writer(s) procured this information. Assistant Director of Admissions, Bert L. Pratt, said such information is confidential and would not have been accessed from the Registrar's office. Pratt added that the only source for the information would be to Hughes himself. And Hughes did not want to comment or deny the information. He did, however, make a safe conclusion that he did not give the information to the author(s) of the letter.

The letter contained the following bits of information: 1. UM alumni return for special weekend

Aliens of the University of Maine returned to the Orono campus last Saturday for their day—Alumni Reunion Day—and saw the dedication of a new alumni center on the Orono campus. Previously, an alumni center was erected for exceptional volunteers who have dedicated their lives to the university.

At the annual General Alumni Association meeting, members voted to make the name of the organization the GAA of the University of Maine at Orono. Its activities and operations will be devoted to the betterment of the Orono campus, according to executive director Donald Stewart.

Elected president of the GAA was Kenneth F. Woodbury, 34, of Green, a regional banker and administrator who recently completed his master’s degree at the University of Maine.

In August, 1968, to assume his current post in the dean of men's office, Fulford returned to the campus where he taught in Dunellen, N.J., High School and Cape Elizabeth High School.

Earlier in the day the first students to be elected members of the Alumni Council were elected as executive director of the GAA before they enter college. and to keep the GAA in line with the views of those soon to become alumni.

A committee will continue endeavor to secure a proposal to form an undergraduate alumni council involving students from various classes, alumni and faculty. The committee is headed by Prof. Herbert Lemon, secretary-treasurer of the GAA.

At the Alumni Luncheon, diplomas were presented to the 1979-1980 GAA executive council.

The polls show Maine's wines are aging well. The wineries are new and old, and the polls are showing a steady increase in sales. A new wave of wine enthusiasts is being cultivated, and the wine industry is seeing a surge in popularity. The polls show that consumers are increasingly interested in trying new wines and exploring different varietals.

Dean of Students
Kaplan assumes new post

Dr. Arthur M. Kaplan proved he know the art of handling people by his smooth handling of the diverse groups of students who come to him as Dean of Students.

President Wintrop C. Libby nominated Dr. Kaplan for the position of acting Dean of Students after the resignation of Dean Charles A. Seamon. Dr. Kaplan has been on the Summer Session faculty of the University of Maine for the past two years as a visiting professor of Anthropology.

Dr. Libby said, "I am confident that Dr. Kaplan's smooth handling of the diverse, difficult, and sometimes demanding problems will mean that, as our present acting Dean, he will continue in that capacity." Professor John L. Flynn, director of special education, has been named by President Libby as acting Dean of Students after the resignation of Dean Seamon.

Lokke teaching new courses

Dr. Virgil Lokke, a member of the English department, said that his major goals were considered in planning the offerings for this summer.

"It's good for all of us, faculty and students, to have someone from outside the University," Hunting said, because an increasing number of visiting faculty are expected to teach the courses offered during the year.

Dr. Lokke has offered both of these courses at a previous Summer Session at the University of Maine. Both will be offered here during the first six-week session, June 16 to July 3.

Health courses begin

An Institute and three courses for teachers of the mentally retarded child will be offered during the University of Maine Summer Session this year.

Enrollment in the Institute on the Psychology of the Mentally Retarded will be limited to approximately 15 students and will emphasize science and social studies and their relationship to various educational programs. Additional courses will be available to those accepted for the Institute.

Dr. Anthony D. Chipparone of the U.M. College of Education and Dr. L. Flynn, director of special education in the Falmouth School District, will be the instructors.

The Institute will run from June 16 to July 3. Five weeks will be devoted to the study of the intellectual background of the modern novel, exploring particularly the uses of philosophical ideas in literary texts. A half dozen of the new ideas of the early 1900's such as the revolution in physics and the "new anthropology" will be considered in the light of their impact on today's literature.

The sessions of the courses at a previous Summer Session at the University of Maine, both will be offered here during the first six-week session, June 16 to July 3.

The philosophical attitude of the Negro revealed by his sense of humor, and humor in the modern English, are two of the courses to be offered by an expanded U.M. English department during the 1969 Summer Session at Orono.

Dr. Robert Hunting, head of the English department, said "It's good for all of us, faculty and students, to have someone from outside." Hunting explained, "Lokke, a Poindexter University professor of English, will teach two new courses, The Black and The Grotesque in the Contemporary Novel and Literature and Modern Thought.

"What seems strange is the absence of philosophical attitudes," according to Hunting, and the student in English 118 will be looking in general terms for the conclusions he may make from a study of the "other," but the "other," he means the Negroes. Among the authors he would like to see are R.A. Cook, Gwenn, Hawkens, Heller, Southern and West. "Literature and Modern Thought, English 199, will take the student into a study of the intellectual background of the modern novel, exploring particularly the uses of philosophical ideas in literary texts. A half dozen of the new ideas of the early 1900's such as the revolution in physics and the "new anthropology" will be considered in the light of their impact on today's literature."
