The university is considering the revocation of the Theta Chi charter. Theta Chi, a fraternity house that last fall claimed to have the highest academic average on campus, is in questionable standing because of unlawful sale of liquor.

"They have threatened to close us," said Fred Lohman, who has been a Theta Chi brother for the past three years. "If they have threatened to close us, we have turned our backs and ignored this kind of behavior."

When asked whether the dorms might be just as guilty as the fraternities for selling liquor unlawfully, Dendurent said, "I don't know if I'm in left field about such allegations, but no one has ever brought me a complaint about the dorms selling."}

At a Fraternity Board meeting last night, president of the fraternity expressed their feelings on the issue of unlawful sale of liquor and the threat of closing Theta Chi.

"If the disciplinary committee takes into consideration the many alternatives which are available other than closing (Theta Chi), hopefully they will see that this action is not necessary and that there are more constructive means of dealing with the problem," said Bill Lomas, president of the Fraternity Board.

Lomas said he felt the question of whether the dorms might be just as guilty of unlawful sale of liquor as the fraternities was significant only in that "if they are guilty, I would hope that the university and the law would treat them in the same manner.

Fraternities were issued three summonses for unlawful sale of liquor in the past year, and when asked why police have not taken action against the dorms as much as the fraternities, Lomas said, "Looking at the past and present actions which have occurred and are being considered, I would seem that the fraternities would try as best they could to make sure that they would not be in a position to be charged with liquor law violations.

When asked what measures might be implemented to lessen unlawful sale of liquor incidents, Lomas said, "Looking at the past and present actions which have occurred and are being considered, it would seem that the fraternities would try as best they could to make sure that they would not be in a position to be charged with liquor law violations.

Lomas said he hoped the sanctions that might be brought against Theta Chi by the conduct committee would be "consistent and take into consideration that Theta Chi..."
Students urged to attend Residential Life meeting

by Gary Pearce
Staff writer

IDB President Pam Barech, speaking at the GSS meeting last night, urged students to attend the Residential Life meetings to be held concerning student lifestyles.

"This Thursday at 4:30," Barch said, "the Policy Review Committee will meet in the Alumni Lounge to consider the status of proposed changes in dormitory sections to quiet status. We have 16 dormitory sections that are quiet, but 16 that are not."

On Tuesday, March 11, an open forum will be held from 3:30 to 3:50 in 265 Auburn Hall to discuss student life in general, quiet hours, and dorm changes specifically.

Designated quiet sections are 4W and 4C Clapp, 5A and 5B 1554, 6C Chadbourne, Rooms 219, 220, 227, and 230, 149 Riverbank, 1N Andrews/Congregational, and 1N Gannett.

Our north Student, three north Knob, one south, four north President and rooms 217, 220, 224, 410, and 419 in K.C. West Hall are slated to become female.

"If the students can explain this," said Barch, "they may not happen."

Police blotter

Scott Dilhorne of Knox Hall was arrested for disorderly conduct Sunday, police said. He was also issued a summons for failing to stop the car he was driving for an officer. An officer had seen him throw an object from her hand, jump into a blue VW and speed off, police said. Police interviewed him. He called them obscene names.

Resident Assistant Dennis Corcoran and when he returned to get it around midnight it was missing. A brown leather billfold, belonging to Roger Brodeur of 208 Estabrooke Hall, was reported missing Saturday. Brodeur had the wallet in his hip pocket while attending a swim meet at Hannibal Hamlin Hall was reported Saturday. There were no signs of entry and nothing was found to be missing.

An antenna on a Toyota Celica parked in Gannett Hall parking lot was reported stolen Monday. It had allegedly been removed by means of tools, though no tool marks were evident. The antenna was valued at $12.

Faculty advising seen as students' major problem

by Stephen Oliver
Staff writer

Poor faculty advising, and a lack of communication between students and administrators were cited Tuesday by the Ad Hoc Committee on Student Life as two of the major problems confronting students.

Committee members met with faculty and students on Monday to discuss problems currently affecting students on the UMO campus.

"The whole advising system needs to be reviewed," committee member Bert Lais said. "We've heard many, many criticisms about this area and feel no single change will solve the problem." Lais, an associate professor of English, stressed the need for the system to be changed.

Tuition hike expected again next fiscal year

by George Roberts

For undergraduates, UMO is the most expensive school in the university system to attend.

Traditionally, the university trustees approve tuition rates in the spring to take effect in the next fiscal year (the university fiscal year runs from July 1 to July 31).

With runaway inflation and a belt-tightening state legislature, the latest of the university's increased costs will be determined during the next tuition hike. Aiden E. Ewe, director of budget and financial services at UMO, did not speculate on the size of the rate hike but said, "I would guess that there will be an increase. We have no idea what it will be next semester, though.

Over the last two years there has been no increase in the tuition rate for resident students. Non-resident fees rose from $2,476 to $2,688.

Whereas resident tuition at UMO has more than doubled during 1968-1980, at some of the other campuses in the university system (Farmington, Fort Kent, Machias and Presque Isle) it has increased over 700 percent.

In-depth study was needed. He said the committee's final report and recommendations will be sent to the Board of Trustees in April.

Two wrongs...

Being a fraternity member myself, the news on the front page sticks a bit in the back of my throat.

The university is considering just punishment for one of UMO's 16 fraternities because of their involvement in the illegal sale of liquor.

The possibility of closing down the fraternity, Theta Chi, is even being considered as one of the alternatives.

Also, the dean of Student Affairs has sent letters to all of UMO's fraternity presidents and executives at the fraternity national chapters informing them of the possibility that their local chapters may be shut down if the houses are involved in the illegal sale of alcohol.

Hence, the first wrong that is mentioned in the headline.

Fraternities do far too much good and offer too many beneficial alternatives to students on this campus to be brought under a blanket charter-revoking policy. Sure, it is wrong that they are selling liquor illegally at parties. Sometimes, they sell liquor to minors, which is also wrong in all cases.

And there is no justification or reason for fraternities to break the law. They should not be allowed to escape legal punishment if they are in violation of liquor laws.

Along these lines, two fraternities were and face their legal punishment if guilty.

If punishment is felt to be necessary by the university, it should be of a constructive manner. Let the fraternity do something beneficial for the community to make up for their wrong.

Closing a house and revoking a charter serves no constructive measure and seems a hard way to teach a lesson. It seems like a pretty harsh measure for a house that just last semester finished with the highest fraternity grade point average.

Now to the second wrong.

Fraternities themselves have to smarten up.

When I was a freshman, the first time I came down to my fraternity house was at an open party. Those days are over.

Last semester, the Campus ran a full-page cover showing a policeman with the words, "The party's over." When I was a freshman, the first time I came down to my fraternity house was at an open party. Those days are over.

The director of the Department of Police and Safety, Alan Reynolds, once said they were trying to stop the flagrant liquor violations.

The police inspectors, the police department and now the university have proved that it is. It's up to the fraternities to take the message.

Forbidden words

Chances are pretty good when you were in the third grade your teacher told you pretty much the same good words too much. Those pretty good words, you were rewarded in the English language - like the words "pretty" and "good".

If that teacher was at UMO today to hear as talk ed as opposite to die on the spot.

Not only would she, but so would a word in the English language that is terribly overworked on this campus.

Yet, people continue to use it, reusing it from a potentially peaceful death. People are wicked.

The use of the word "wicked" is a case in point.

The first time I heard the word was in the Wizard of Oz. You remember the Wicked Witch of the West. She was terribly ugly and a personality to match.

This connotation of the word "wicked" is engraved in the vocabulary section of my brain. I remembered the word as an adjective, or a word to describe nouns.

The next time I heard the word was when I went to summer camp in western Massachusetts. The co-ed campers threw the word around without batting an eye.

For some reason, the way in which they used the word, any memory of the word did not match.

I figured why that was. Those campers were using the word as an adverb, or to describe an adjective. It threw me for a loop.

"The game is wicked good." "My counselor is wicked smart." "This chow smells wicked bad." "I'm a wicked good dancer.

After this traumatic session at camp, I went back six years without hearing the word, except in annual re-runs of the Wizard of Oz.

It hit me again. That word "wicked" was a contagious disease on campus. It seemed as though there was no escape from the word. My roommates used it. My R.A. used it. People across the hall used it. People on the next floor used it even more.

I made a solemn vow to never use the word unless I were describing a witch. I did pretty well. Pardon me, I did pretty well! It threw me for a loop. To the Editor:

Gamma Sigma Sigma is a national service sorority, and has been spreading its ideals of friendship, service, and equality on campus for the past 10 years (celebrating its 10th anniversary last October).

The sisters volunteered over 1,200 service hours last semester, including projects such as football concessions, a crafts fair for Easter baskets for the needy, trip or treatment for UNICEF, a program with international students, a fashion show to benefit MS, and weekly bloodbanks.

Both Gamma Sigma Sigma and its brother fraternity, Alpha Phi Omega, are eager to serve the campus and community in as many ways as possible.

Yes folks, there is hope for salvation

I've had two really bad scares in the last few days.

No, I didn't eat in one of the dining commons.

I stared up Sunday night and watched the PTL (Praise The Lord) Club on television, and then Monday, I read The Daily Worker, the newspaper of the American Communist Party. However noble you consider the purpose of these two organizations, it... Even though the PTL Club was in its last hour of a telethon to raise money for its Christian television ministry, "paying souls for the Lord," through the miracle of satellite communications. Throughout the show, on the bottom of the screen, were telephone numbers, one of which was a view decided to make a pledge, another to call if a person wished to pray with a PTL counselor.

I struck me as hypocritical that the pledge number was toll free (1-800), while the prayer number was not.

"Praise God!" host Jim Bakker exclaimed, "The 800 numbers are jammed. We can give the Devil a real black eye!"

As I was getting up my nerve to call the PTL Club on television, and share my observation, Bakker came on the screen and, relating the marvelous work the PTL legal council had done in handling a government investigation into the PTL Club's finances.

Bakker said the government had checked the club's records and found no wrongdoing, I believe him.

"You can destroy Jim Bakker," he said, "but that ain't the Bible, he added, credits Jesus with saying "Touch not my anointed." I decided not to call.

I had an urge to call the last time I watched the show, a year ago New Year's Eve, right after a guest on the show foreword a natural progression from homosexuality to child molestation, to right one murders. I failed to follow his reasoning.

Yesterday, I signed a petition that would place the names of two Communist Party members on the Presidential ballot in November.

Petyr liberal of me, I thought, giving myself a quick pat on my back.

Later, I picked up a copy of the Daily Worker and saw that the editor had left for Erin in the Berkshires.

I didn't expect it to hold the same views as the Village Voice, I'm a case in the middle of Western students who want to listen to their own eye. We can relax, because the Devil is only after God's people.

What are you signing?

To the Editor:

All day Monday, there was a man outside the Memorial Union trying to get registered Maine voters to sign a nominating petitions enabling two Communist candidates to be on the ballot. I watched in fascination as he stopped a female coming out of the Union, spoke to her for approximately a minute, and then give her his pen to sign the petition. Certainly got the better of me, so I ran after the girl and tapped her on the shoulder.

"Can I ask you a question?" I asked.

"Sure," she replied.

"How do you feel about the Soviet Union?"

"Well, gee, I'm against the Soviets and as such as an outcome, I was, I want to see western things in the world. They are just the way they are," she replied.

"Do you know what you just signed?"

"Yeah, I signed to get those two people on the ballot. That's all."

"That's all? You're against communism and yet you signed that nominating petition?"

"I'm not in favor of them. I don't have to vote for them or anything. Hey, they're not going to win anyway."

"Of course they're not going to win. They don't even want to win. They just want political recognition. They want to be able to say, 'we've got our foot in America, too.' Pure Manifest Destiny of Communism."

"I'm not in favor of them. I don't have to vote for them or anything. Hey, they're not going to win anyway."

I hope that young woman sees this article. Maybe now she'll start thinking about what she's signing before she signs it. I'd hate to see the mess we'd be in, if people signed petitions for reasons as strong as hers!

GM agrees to refund $2M to customers

DETROIT—General Motors has agreed to refund two million dollars to customers in a case where GM was accused of repossessioning cars, selling them and pocketing the profits.

The Federal Trade Commission charged GM's credit subsidiary, General Motors Acceptance Corporation, with running "sham" sales to approved customers of money to which they were legally entitled. When a person's car is repossessed and auctioned off, the consumer is supposed to get all profits except for the outstanding debt and some expenses.

The FTC said GMAC got around this by selling some cars to itself at a low price, then re-selling the autos at higher rates.

In signing the consent agreement, GM and the subsidiary did not acknowledge any law violations.

A GM spokesman says consumers eligible for the refunds will be notified as soon as they can be identified.

O'Neill predicts draft proposal will survive House committee vote

WASHINGTON—House Speaker Tip O'Neill predicts that President Carter's house registration program will survive a key vote Wednesday in the House Appropriations Committee.

The panel will be considering legislation to fund the registration of men. An appropriations subcommittee had earlier rejected this proposal. But the House speaker says House leaders believe there are enough votes in the full appropriations committee to approve the bill and send it to the House floor.

There, he expects it to be approved.

Says O'Neill: "I still think there's enough support and interest in the House to pass a registration bill."

Court forces Rumford to have policewoman

RUMFORD—Rumford has a woman police officer for the first time in its history though the last one had to go to court to get the job.

Jacqueline Walton started work Tuesday after a four-year battle to gain a job in her hometown.

Ms. Walton, who was represented by the Maine Civil Liberties Union, filed suit in federal court a year ago, alleging the city's policy of not hiring women police officers was based on sex discrimination. Ms. Walton was denied because she was a woman.

The consent decree reached at both parties and signed last week by Judge Edward Gignoux said Ms. Walton would start work this week as a part-time officer. Under the agreement, she is to be granted access to the first full-time police opening available in Rumford following the successful completion of police academy courses.

Research underway for joint energy study

BRUNSWICK—Twenty liberal arts colleges in the northeast have agreed to investigate the possibility of a joint study on ways to lower souring fuel costs. The president of Bowdoin College in Brunswick, Dr. Willard Esteman, advanced the plan in letters to his fellow presidents at the 19 other colleges. He said today he has received positive replies from all of them.

Esteman said he was suggesting essentially a study program. Together, he said, the colleges could conduct a major research corporation to conduct a study on common energy problems in the northeast. He said such a study might establish general principles within which each college could conduct its own building-by-building energy audit.

Enteman said that after an estimate of the cost is obtained, the colleges could ask corporations, foundations and the Department of Energy to fund the study.

Jean's Ayatollah Khomeini has agreed to a meeting between the UN commission and the American hostages being held at the U.S. Embassy. Tehran radio says Foreign Minister Ghorbadeh made the announcement after a meeting of the revolutionary council Tuesday. The council itself had given its consent.

No date was mentioned for the meeting. So far, there's been no response from the militants for the response from the militants occupying the embassy. The last word from them was that the UN commission could not meet with the hostages until after it had made its report.

Increase in defense spending likely

There are growing indications that whatever economies the country may make to fight inflation, they won't be in defense spending. In fact, Pentagon sources say that the military establishment may need billions of dollars more than anticipated to meet rising fuel costs.

President Carter, in asking other government departments to re-examine their budgets with a view to cuts, did not make a similar request to the Pentagon. Carter has come out for a five percent "real growth" in Pentagon spending for the next fiscal year. That means five percent after inflation is taken into account. But some representatives, including Democrat David Obey of Wisconsin and Republican James Jonas of Oklahoma, say the defense establishment should bear any necessary cuts. Johnson gone
by Scott Cole
A talented basketball player took a ride down the turnpike to Boston Monday and may have taken a promising UMO career with him.

Freemont forward Joe Johnson was picked up by his parents at his Amoskeak Hall residence Monday afternoon and left campus for his Mat- tugun, Massachusetts home.

The Registrar's office stated yester- day afternoon that they had no one by the name of Joe Johnson on their withdrawal list. Thus Johnson is still officially a student at the university.

Johnson told his roommate and teammate Bruce before leaving Mon- day that he was having family problems.

When contacted early Tuesday af- ternoon Sumpter stated he was "not sure" if Johnson would return to the semester but was not surprised by his friend's departure.

Johnson called Sumpter from Mat- tugun last on Tuesday afternoon and said he was having "personal problems" and would "try to come back this semester."

One basketball player was im- pressed of the freshman shootblocker's leaving commented that Johnson had not attended a class yet this semester.

Several teammates were made to reach Johnson yesterday afternoon but his family, like many others in the Mat- tugun area, has an unpublished phone num- ber.

Coach Skip Chappelle was unavailable for comment as he was on the trip in Massachusetts with assistant Peter Gavett recruiting.

Tuesday's race with a chance to take the crown, finished seventh. He would have had to finish third to win the overall title. Mueller did not wind up in the top ten in Tuesday's event, but he still had enough points for the overall downhill championship.
PVEA to sponsor energy workshops

by Paul Fillmore
Staff writer

The Penobscot Valley Energy Alliance began last night to organize for their "Energy Options Day" to be held this April.

This day will have an "alternative focus" on energy resources and options available to the people of Maine. The conference will offer workshops on wind, hydroelectric, coal and nuclear energy.

The group decided to steer away from their traditional anti-nuclear position as an attempt to reach as many people as possible to the workshops. The workshops last night were attended almost exclusively by anti-nuclear supporters.

"We have been a broad-based thing," said Steve Webster, one member of the alliance, "where people come and learn all the alternatives."

There was disagreement at the meeting as to whether a pro-nuclear speaker should be invited.

"Trying to be fair is, to a degree, counterproductive," said Mark Harrington, another member of the alliance. However, he felt the oil industry should not be represented because it already constantly bombards the public with reasons why there should be no nuclear energy.

Webster did not agree. "By not including them we're sticking to our own level," he said.

Another member of the group, Loren Hanson, felt the focus of the day should be on energy. "People haven't already made up their minds on energy issues. "We have to affect people for the people who haven't decided," she said.

The alliance plans to sponsor "Three Mile Island Day" later this month. They will broadcast a 15-minute show from actual transcripts of happenings at the plant after the union. "People can see what kind of bungling ideas are watching over the plants," said PVEA member Tom Smith.

"Several of us disagreed because we remember something about the legality of this situation," Hooper added. "Hooper said, "Now there are a lot of people who don't know about the rule, and there are some old ones who have just forgotten. That's why we need a bulletin to inform people."

Front Page functions fairly well without the inside scoop, without the newspaper background. For the majority of the moderate house in Hauck Tuesday night, the dry side. Sitting in a conference waiting for a story to break may not be that exciting, but the opening scene of the first act was a bit too real for what is supposed to be a classic American comedy. (It should be noted here that Bob Colby did an excellent short duet with the sheriff (Alan Stanhope), and Bob Giguere was the personification of the reporter — baggy socks, persistent "Anything goin' on?", and a tinge of newspaper in his blood.)

Peter Brown, as Bennett of the Chicago Tribune, played a true comic character with style — his winy, knickered portrayal was always com- fortable pat.

Technically, the play was good if not great. Break-glass windows in the arched windows was well used, but the sound system betrayed its presence with a constant humming. The game of the play carried through with the naturalistic sounds from the small closet just off the press room, yet it would have been much more believable if the phones rang for real instead of off a tape recorder.

But at no time do you feel that they were authentically styled candlestick phones. For a piece about the media, being in Hauck last night for the opening of Front Page was probably a right number. If there were any phones, it's in their head. But then it is true that the boringest part in this show was the character of Bennett on the press.
