Principles of Musical Theory

By

RENÉE LONGY-MIQUELLE

Teacher of Solfege, Curtis Institute, Philadelphia;
Director of The Longy School of Music, Boston.

$2.00

This book will be gladly welcomed by conscientious teachers and students of music, for it presents thoroughly and clearly that information about music which is the most important step to a complete musical education. The chapter of definitions will serve as a model. The "general Principles of musical Interpretation" is quite the finest and most practical collection of such suggestions to be found anywhere and the wonderfully complete tables of about everything musical one might need will prove valuable to him who intelligently refers to them.

Everyone undertaking the study of music should acquire five indispensable possessions: first, an exact knowledge of the substance of music; second, a well-trained ear; third, the ability to do with the eye what is ordinarily done by the ear; fourth, a thoroughly developed rhythmic sense; and fifth, a sound and discriminating musical taste. These are not only necessary to an intelligent appreciation of music and to a successful participation in it, but they are essential pre-requisites to the study of Harmony and the more advance branches of music.

To those who desire a clear, thorough, and systematic explanation of the fundamentals of music this book will make a marked appeal; and for teachers who seek a textbook for classes in elementary music, the present volume will appear as a real contribution to the literature of music pedagogy.

The Concord Piano Books

An Elementary Course of Instruction based on Folk-Songs (with words) and on Physical Interpretation of Rhythm

By

KATHERINE K. DAVIS

Four Volumes Each .75

("Concord Series" Nos. 600, 601, 602, 603)

This is a series of books containing music suited to the needs of young people studying pianoforte playing. The particular excellence of these books lies in the music itself, which is uniformly of a high quality, and in the adequate number of pieces for each stage of progress. The use of texts for singing is also an essential element in the plan of the early books, as this provides a means of training the child's ear,—a necessary preliminary to pianoforte playing and one often neglected. In short, these books are intended for music lessons and not solely for lessons in pianoforte playing. As an aid in the development of the rhythmic sense, physical exercises, such as are used in the Jacques-Dalcroze System of Eurhythmics, have been introduced. The most interesting of modern methods for beginners.

The melodies of these little pieces and duets are taken from Folk-Tunes and Traditional airs of England and other countries and skilfully harmonized, they may be used to supplement any Instruction Book or System of Teaching. No better foundation is possible for the young music student. The primo and secondo parts of the duets are of equal difficulty and the words of each song are printed between the staves.
