Maine Access to Inclusive
Education Resources

Co-teaching, planning, and assessing 101 learning options now available through MAIER

Are you looking for an asynchronous learning experience on this topic, or perhaps ready to dive in deeper and join a synchronous online learning group of your peers? MAIER and 2Teach have collaborated to provide you with options that fit your needs.

Join one or both options (more info on each below). Both are free, although registration is required for each.

Online Asynchronous Learning Module Available

Want to learn about Co-teaching, planning and assessing 101 on your own time, when it is convenient for you? Click below to get more information about practical, innovative, and research-based strategies that improve instruction in today's inclusive classrooms and organizations. One of the ways that schools are increasingly using to address the needs of students with and without special needs in the general education classroom is through co-teaching. Co-teaching involves having a general education teacher and special service provider

Join an Online Group That Meets Synchronously

Learn and develop an enhanced understanding of what it means to co-teach, plan, and assess with your colleagues. By joining this Community of Practice; designed and lead by YOU, facilitated and supported by MAIER's Research Associate, Dr. Anica Miller Rushing, and 2Teach's talented Dr. Melissa Jenkins, you will increase your ability to use these practical, innovative, and research-based strategies to improve Universally Designed Instruction in today's inclusive classrooms and organizations. Learn more together because Communities of Practice are spaces we facilitate and support by providing some framing but ultimately it is flexible based on YOUR needs and wants at this time. We work to make sure this time is effective for you to get what you need so that you can more deeply consider Co-teaching, planning, and assessing as part of your teaching practice. The group starts meeting in May, get more info and register below. Don't miss out!

(e.g., special education teacher, Title I teacher, ELL specialist, speech/language pathologist) sharing in the planning, instruction, and assessment to ensure student success. This co-teaching and co-planning can be accomplished with the same staffing availability and within the current planning time with planning and support. Want to know more? Click below.
