Undisclosed settlement reached in Watras lawsuit

BANGOR, Maine (AP) — A lawsuit filed by a former player against former University of Maine basketball coach Peter Gavett has been settled out of court, according to a court filing cited in a published report Saturday.

No details of the settlement between Gavett and Victoria Watras were contained in the document filed Friday in Penobscot County Superior Court, the Bangor Daily News said.

Gavett, contacted by the newspaper, had no immediate comment. He declined comment in January when the suit was filed. Other parties to the case could not be located Saturday by The Associated Press.

Watras had alleged that Gavett requested sexual favors repeatedly during a period between October 1985 and January 1988.

The former player's suit also charged that Gavett once assaulted her.

Gavett resigned as coach in June 1988, four months after signing a three-year contract extension.

"The simple fact is that I was accused of harassment and chose to resign," he said at the time. The university issued a statement then saying Gavett admitted having "physical contact of a personal nature" with a student and that he had resigned rather than face a suspension or investigation.

In February 1989, by order of the Maine supreme court, the terms of a settlement between Gavett and the university were released. Terms included a year's salary of $36,000 for the coach, paid out of a discretionary fund controlled by University of Maine President Dale W. Lick.

The university system was dismissed as a defendant in Watras' suit in March. The former player had charged that officials knew or should have known about accusations against the coach. The university disputed her contention, saying it had policies in place to prevent activities

Campuses report recruiting cutback a national trend

(CPS) — The number of businesses recruiting at colleges has stabilized or, even decreased this fall, say some college placement officers, and they fear it may become the trend.

"Students are going to have to look a little harder and a little longer" for jobs, acknowledged Sharon Fulkerson, office manager for Career Services at East Texas State University, where the number of campus recruiters dropped from 20 last fall to 11 this fall.

The student job market, in sum, seems to be tightening.

"My presumption is the economic climate is such that the jobs just aren't out there," Fulkerson said.

"We have heard that some (companies) are cutting back," confirmed Dawn Oberman, a statistical services specialist with the College Placement Council (CPC), which tracks recruiting and hiring of college graduates nationwide.

Oberman said smaller companies and those that recruit nationally are the ones that seem to be cutting back.

Barbara Hayes, recruiting communications director for Hewlett Packard, said her company has reduced its student recruiting "quite a bit" in the last three years.

"We're trying to keep the workforce flat," Hayes explained.

The same number of companies are recruiting at the University of Vermont, but they are interviewing fewer students, said Jane Graiko, the school's interviewing coordinator.

"I don't see it (the number of companies recruiting) going up or down," said Chuck Whitman, director of Career Services at Youngstown State University in Ohio, where recruiting has remained stable the last two years.

For fall and spring graduates, all this could mean more job seekers applying for fewer positions.

"There's going to be much more competition" among students for jobs, Vermont's Graiko said.

"There are already job seekers camped out on doorsteps" of companies that are accepting applications, agreed Fulkerson.

Law schools have been especially hard hit by the drop in recruiters.

Georgetown, American and Harvard university law schools as well as the University of California at Berkeley's law school all have reported that fewer law firms are recruiting this fall.

"There should be no sense of panic, but you are probably aware that this may not be like other recent recruiting seasons," wrote June Thomson, recruiting chief for Harvard University Law School, in a letter to Harvard law students.

New policies govern on-campus recruiting at UMaine

By Marc Rancourt
Staff Writer

Organizations wishing to recruit individuals on the University of Maine campus will be adhering to new policies.

On Oct. 19 Dale Lick approved a new set of recruiting policies submitted by the Faculty Senate, the Student Government, and the Association of Graduate Students.

The policies were prompted by ongoing debate during the 1989-90 school year over CIA recruiting methods here at UMaine.

Two of the five new policies directly affect the CIA's recruiting methods.

The CIA will not be recruiting here at UMaine this year due to the current economic conditions according to Adrian Sewall, director of the Career Center.

Thomas Christensen, President of the Faculty Senate, believes that the new policies were a compromise.

"All that was passed was a compromise between views of both sides of the issue," Christensen said. "I think it represents the broad view of the faculty."

Christensen believes that the students have the right to choose who they wish to talk to in terms of organizations that are recruiting on the UMaine campus.

"I would resent the University telling me who I can and cannot talk to," Christensen said. "The resolutions that were passed reflect that."

Ethan Strimling, president of the Maine Peace Action Committee, is satisfied with the new policies.

"I'm pretty pleased with the new policies," said Strimling. "They do not prohibit the opportunity to recruit."

All policies submitted were approved except for one. A policy stating that the CIA could not practice covert recruiting here on the UMaine campus was passed by the Student Senate with a vote of 10-2 but the Faculty Senate and Lick voted it down.

Christensen said the CIA can promise that they will not practice covert recruiting but how can the university enforce it and be sure that they do not covertly recruit.

"It was a question of enforceability," Christensen said.

Steven Mendros, vice president of Student Government was personally against the policy.

"I didn't feel that we should be taking that extra step without the students viewpoint," Mendros said. Lick was unavailable to comment on why he was against the policy.

The first new policy states that through a petition signed by 300 students, faculty, or staff a public forum to discuss the recruiting organization's policies and practices will be scheduled.

The petition must state which of the recruiter's practices or policies are in question and must be delivered to Adrian J. Sewall, director of the Career Center. Any organization that refuses to comply with a request to participate in a public forum will not be permitted future use of UMaine campus facilities for recruiting purposes until the required forum is held.

The policy also requires that the Career Center shall notify the UMaine community of all organizations scheduled to recruit students on the UMaine campus.

The second policy states that any member of the UMaine community who has an ongoing or occasional relationship with the CIA as a recruiter should report that fact in writing to the university.

The policy also states that any member of the UMaine community who is recruiting shall not give the CIA the name of another member of the university community without the prior consent of that individual.

The third policy states that the Career Center will exercise leadership to expand and enhance opportunities for students to consider a broader range of ethical issues and personal values in their career planning.

The fourth policy states that all employers seeking to recruit on campus will be asked to sign a statement indicating their compliance with the University's non-discrimination policy. The recruiting organization does not have to adhere to UMaine's discrimination policy if they choose not to but does have to adhere to the federal non-discrimination policy.

UMaine's non-discrimination policy states that "the University of Maine shall not discriminate and shall comply with applicable laws prohibiting discrimination on the grounds of race, color, religion, sex, sexual orientation, national origin or citizenship status, or education, and all other areas of the University."

The University of Maine does not discriminate on the basis of handicap in admission or access to, or treatment or employment in its programs and activities.

Young Saddam Hussein taking ribbing in Mississippi

PEARL, Miss. (AP) — Meet Saddam Hussain.

He plays baseball, likes cheese pizza and watches wrestling on television.

But this Saddam is a 9-year-old fourth-grader at Pearl Upper Elementary School in this community near Jackson.

Friends say he's an all-around nice kid.

A Pakistan native, Saddam says he is unfazed by sharing a name with the man President Bush branded "the butcher of Baghdad."

"When I was little, my parents used to tell me all about Saddam," he said. "I know he's not a nice person."

"He is handling it all very well," teacher Patsy Rogers said of the occasional ribbing Saddam takes about his name. "He has a sense of humor."

Saddam said he quickly got used to double takes and quizzical looks from teachers when school started a few weeks after Iraq invaded Kuwait Aug. 2.

"They don't notice my name that much now," he said.

"Our music teacher said that in the Saddam Hussain over there was as sweet as the Saddam Hussain over here, we wouldn't have any problems," said Paige Welborn, one of Saddam's classmates. "I think she's right."

Saddam is quick to point out a key difference between his name and the Iraqi leader's: "He spells his (last) name with an 'E'," Saddam said. "I spell mine with an 'A'."

Saddam got his name for two reasons: His older brother is named Hasham, and the rhyming names sounded good for a pair of brothers, his father, Manzoor Hussain, said, adding:

"In New York, where I was working, I had an Iranian friend. I would tell him, 'I'm going to have a son, and I'm going to name him Saddam.'"

He said he was only teasing his Iranian friend. At that time in 1980, Iran and Iraq were at war.

"After we had a son, I thought, 'Why not name him Saddam? It's a good name,'" said Hussain, a veterinarian for the U.S. Agriculture Department in Jackson.

Most of Saddam's peers at Pearl Upper Elementary understand a bit about events developing in the Persian Gulf, Rogers said.

A few classmates have greeted him with military salutes.

"I just ignore them," Saddam said, shrugging.

"I don't like it when people make fun of him," said Scott Rowan, one of Saddam's best friends. "I take up for him."

Rogers smiles when talking about Saddam's part in a class project.

"They wrote letters to the servicemen in the Middle East," she said. "You're going to love what Saddam put on his card. He wrote, 'I'm not who you think I am.'"

News in Brief

OKLAHOMA CITY (AP) — A doctor whose wife died as he performed liposuction on her in his office must stand trial on a murder charge, a judge rules.

Joe Bills Reynolds' wife, Sharon, 43, died during a four-hour operation Sept. 7, 1989. The liposuction left her with a two-foot-long wound and drained most of the blood from her body, medical witnesses testified during a preliminary hearing.

MANAMA, Bahrain (AP) — An exiled Kuwaiti official says the government-in-exile has alerted the Arab League and the United Nations that Iraq is using Kuwaiti letterhead and altering documents it seized in the invasion.

A document purporting to show that the CIA and Kuwait conspired to damage Iraq's economy is a fake and was stamped with a seal taken by the invading Iraqis, Sheikh Sabah al-Ahmed, exiled Kuwaiti deputy premier and foreign minister, said Friday.

BUDAPEST, Hungary (AP) — Officials of the crumbling Warsaw Pact agreed Saturday to divide up their tanks and other conventional weapons, as action that paves the way for an East-West accord covering all of Europe.

Foreign Minister Geza Jeszenszky said the agreement was the "first step toward a new system of security in Europe," replacing the Cold War confrontation that plagued Europe for more than four decades.

NEW YORK (AP) — After nine months of gossip about the war between the Trumps, Ivana is filing for divorce from developer Donald.

The Trumps announced Friday in statements that she is seeking the divorce.

BEDDING (AP) — About 27,000 people are poisoned by pesticides each year in one Chinese province, 10 percent of them fatally, an official report said Saturday.

The Legal Daily attributed the high incidence of poisonings in east China's Jiangsu province to the growing use of pesticides over the past decade without adequate safety instructions. No nationwide figures were given.

AUGUSTA (AP) — Boise Cascade Corp. has agreed to pay $154,666 in penalties for anti-pollution law and license violations, the Maine Department of Environmental Protection said.

The payment stems from a settlement of air quality complaints against the Boise Cascade mill in Rumford between 1987 and 1990, officials said.

MURPHYSBORO, Ill. (AP) — An army reservist who decided to join the peace movement rather than report for active duty in Saudi Arabia was arrested Friday on a charge of military desertion, authorities said.

Spec. Stephanie R. Atkinson was arrested at her home in Murphysboro, the Jackson County sheriff's office said in a statement.

ISLAMABAD, Pakistan (AP) — Ousted Prime Minister Benazir Bhutto and her party walked out of the new Parliament today after her jailed husband was not allowed to attend the swearing-in ceremony.

The right-wing Islamic Democratic Alliance, which routed Ms. Bhutto in last month's election, took the oath without them to form Pakistan's fifth civilian government.

GAINSEVILLE, Ga. (AP) — A car with human bones inside that was hauled from the bottom of a lake may have been the one that ran off the road in 1958, say officials still trying to determine what happened to the two occupants.

The 1950's Ford sedan removed from 110-foot depths of Lake Lanier on Thursday bore a 1958 license plate, and could lead to resolution of the "Lady of the Lake" mystery, Hall County Sheriff Dick Mecum said.

HARARE, Zimbabwe (AP) — African Olympic organizers, in their first meeting with South African sports officials, today refused to drop their sports boycott against South Africa despite the white-led Pretoria government's racial reforms.

But Africa's main Olympic policy making body also said at the beginning of the two-day meeting that it looks forward to readmission of South African sportsmen to international events "in the fairly near future."

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — A Harvard divinity school graduate is suing the federal government, claiming religious discrimination against non-American Indians, in hopes of obtaining an exemption from legal restrictions on the possession of bald eagle feathers and body parts.

Erwin L. Rupert II, 35, is seeking to reverse a 1987 U.S. Fish and Wildlife Department ruling that denied his application for permission to obtain feathers to be used in religious services from the government.

GENEVA (AP) — More than 10,000 new cases of AIDS were reported to the World Health Organization in October, raising the global total to 298,914 — more than half of those cases in the United States.

A WHO report published Friday said 5,227 of the new victim were in the United States and 3,125 new cases in Uganda, which has the second highest incidence in the world.

JERUSALEM (AP) — Palestinians enraged by the death of a prison inmate clashed Saturday with soldiers using tear gas and gravel-throwing machines. One protester was killed and dozens were injured, Arab and army reports said.

Curfews were imposed on four villages and refugee camps in the occupied Gaza strip in an effort to quell the unrest, according to a statement from the army, which reported 43 injuries among the protesters.

BARABOO, Wis. (AP) — A Wisconsin towel company has a big — and wide — order to fill:

The National Football League wants 2,100 terry-cloth robes and wraps for players so female reporters won't face any more locker-room in reference.

"The Green Bay Packers equipment manager called and said the terry wrappers we sent weren't large enough to fit five of their 300-pound players," said Greg McArthur, executive vice president of the family business.

Onward Tutor Program feeling squeeze of tight budget

By Cindy Kopp
Special to The Campus

The Onward tutorial assignment process ended earlier than usual this month according to the director of the program, Ruth Doucette, because no more tutors could be hired and they already had a waiting list of about 20 students.

Last year the Onward Tutor Program provided small group tutoring for 843 students in 100 different courses and employed about 100 peer tutors, but it is not the case this year, she said.

"This is a very tight year budget-wise," Doucette said, and their usual $40,000 budget has been reduced by on-half. Onward was able to hire only 48 peer tutors this semester where last year they had between 90 to 100.

"I'm running up against a brick wall" said Doucette. According to a former tutor, Bob McHatten, "that's bad because the program works."

The Onward Tutor program is a service that gives student some place to go for answers and allows tutors to reinforce their skill in whatever class they're tutoring, according to a tutor who prefers to remain anonymous.

As a brochure on the Onward story stated, "Don't expect miracles to happen at your initial meeting, progress is made as you work and learn. It takes a lot of hard work, time, and patience to produce the grade improvement you desire."

The tutor agreed. "This is exactly what some students come in expecting," he said.

He further explained that these students feel that since they have a tutor they're going to ace the class. For the average student being tutored, he describes it more like an open door at an end of a dark hallway, "the tutor helps the student get to that door and open it to find a bright light shining through."

McHatten said the program works because in a small group there isn't as much competition in asking questions, and there is consistency not like in the other departments, where they have many different tutors all teaching in different ways.

Even though no more assignments are being made, Doucette does give a few other options. Work together with fellow classmates, she said, look at some other academic support services on campus and she is in the process of trying to put together a list of private tutors for those in need of help.

As for next semester, Doucette says it's a "wait and see game" on how much money tutors earn this semester and how many graduate leaving openings for other tutors.

Harvard's self-appointed copyright cop strikes again

(CPS) - Calvin and Hobbes, Bart Simpson and Ronald McDonald have found a college student who will fight for their rights.

Andrew Starr, taking a year off from his statistics studies at Harvard University, recently turned in Harvard Dining Services for adopting names for its breakfast entrees - the MacEgg and Bagel Mac - that mirrored those of some of the McDonalds Corporations' concoctions.

McDonalds called Harvard in late September, and asked it to change the names.

Harvard dining services Director Frank Weissbecker said he changed the names voluntarily after being approached by a McDonalds rep at a conference.

"It was not a pressure decision at all," he said. "We're pretty small people for McDonalds."

It's not the first time Starr has volunteered to police copyrights around classmates.

In May, he told 20th Century Fox, which owns the copyrights to The Simpsons cartoon characters, that students at Dunster House, a Harvard dorm, had printed T-shirts featuring Bart Simpson drawing on a blackboard.

"It's against the law," Starr said. "I feel it's like plagiarism. They're using someone else's work."

Fox wrote to Dunster House and told

Deficit reduction bill to cost average $321 a year

By Jim Luther
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP) — The deficit reduction bill awaiting President Bush's signature will cost the average family of four $321 a year, with additional taxes spread close to evenly among the states, a new analysis shows.

The average increase will range from $151 per family in West Virginia to $578 in Connecticut, according to computations by Citizens for Tax Justice, a labor-financed research group. The Maine average was put at $219. The New Hampshire average was estimated at $332.

The organization representing state lawmakers said the deficit-reduction plan will cost the states $16.9 billion over the next five years.

"Once again, congressional and administration budget negotiators have taken the easy way out by exporting difficult decisions to the states," the National Conference of State Legislatures said in a statement.

"Many states face severe recessionary and no-growth economic conditions," said the statement from Lee Daniels, minority leader of the Illinois House of Representatives, and John Martin, speaker of the Maine House of Representatives. "Knowing this, Washington now decides to invade state revenue bases and at the same time tell states they need to find billions of additional dollars."

The biggest portion of the $16.9 billion — $10.1 billion — will come from provisions mandating Social Security coverage for all state and local government employees and raising the amount of wages that are subject to the Medicare tax. Employers, including governments, must match employee taxes for Social Security and Medicare.

Other costs will include $3.6 billion in lost state revenues because of the higher taxes on gasoline, tobacco and alcoholic beverages, and $3.2 billion that the states will have to spend to meet federal regulations for Medicare and Medicaid services.

The changes will take an average 0.6 percent of family income on a national basis, the report said. The bite on family income will be within one-tenth of a percentage point of the national average in every state except Connecticut (0.8 percent) and West Virginia (0.4 percent).

"Generally, states with the highest incomes will face slightly higher-than-average... tax hikes as a share of income, while those with the lowest average incomes will pay the least in additional taxes," the report said.

"This reflects the fact, overall, the tax hikes are somewhat progressive," meaning they fall most heavily on those most able to pay, the organization said.

On a national basis, the median tax increase will be $183, meaning that half the four-member families will see tax increases of less than $183 and half will see increases of more.

The highest median increase, $250, will be in Alaska; the lowest, $152, in Pennsylvania. The median increase differs from the average increase, which is calculated by dividing all new taxes by all taxpaying families.

The bill, which would cut the deficit by nearly $500 billion over the next five years, includes $137 billion in tax increases.

Crisis foreseen by heat-aid study panel

PORTLAND, Maine (AP) — Rising energy costs and decreases in federal heat assistance have put Maine's low-income residents on "the brink of crisis," said a report that calls for more assistance from the Legislature.

The draft report, due to be presented to Gov. John R. McKernan later this month, estimates it will cost an additional $12 million in government aid to keep low-income Mainers warm this winter.

A draft of the report by the Blue Ribbon Commission on Energy Policy for Maine's Low Income Citizens, established last January by McKernan, paints a grim picture for the 225,000 people living below the poverty level in Maine. It says federal funding for Maine's 11-year-old Home Energy Assistance Program has dropped each year since 1985. As a result, the report says, HEAP is able to buy 9 million fewer gallons of fuel than it did in 1985.

Average household benefits have also dropped, from $316 in 1986 to $280 this year. The latter figure could rise to $300 if a special fund transfer is approved by the Legislature.

If heating oil this winter averages $1.20 a gallon, it will take an additional $12 million to provide the same level of assistance that was available to the poor in 1986, when fuel prices were lower, the economy was robust and federal cuts had

GOP governors in jeopardy in Tuesday's election

By William M. Welch
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON (AP)—Maine's John R. McKernan and at least five fellow Republican governors are in danger of losing their jobs in Tuesday's elections as they are judged by voters frustrated by higher taxes and worried about recession.

GOP control of several open seats also is in jeopardy. And the races for five of the biggest states — California, Texas, Florida, Ohio and Illinois — are closely contested. Four of the five, Ohio being the exception, are in GOP hands now.

"Republicans are hanging on by a thread in almost a dozen races," said political analyst Charles Cook. "Many more Republican seats are closer to the edge than Democratic ones."

High on the list of vulnerable GOP governors is Florida Gov. Bob Martinez, who is locked in a close race with Democratic challenger Lawton Chiles.

GOP governors in Maine, Nebraska, Kansas and Rhode Island also are trailing or in close contests in the polls.

A sixth, Alabama Gov. Guy Hunt, is in a close race in a state that hadn't elected a GOP governor this century until he won four years ago. Hunt faces Democrat Paul Hubbert in what has become a bitter contest.

GOP Govs. Kay Orr in Nebraska and Mike Hayden in Kansas started behind due to voter anger over local tax increases. Incumbents Edward DiPrete in Rhode Island and Maine's McKernan were hurt by the Northeast's economic downturn. McKernan has staged a comeback in the polls against former Gov. Joseph Brennan. But there's been no recovery for DiPrete — polls show him down as much as 3-to-1 to Democrat Bruce Sndun.

Republican retirements have also left Democrats in strong positions in New Mexico and Oklahoma.

Some Democratic-controlled governorships may fall too, however. And with a 29-21 advantage in governor's seats, Democrats have more to lose in the 36 gubernatorial races this year. Many races were statistical dead heats in the final days before the election.

"It could be the best of times; it could be the worst of times," said Mark Gearan, director of the Democratic Governors' Association.

"We could be in a situation where all of our candidates win, or they don't. But it's also clear in several of the open seats we have leads right now."

At least two potential Democratic losses may not be GOP gains. Independent candidates are leading in three-way races in Alaska and Connecticut.

Both independent candidates are former Republicans now running outside their party: former Nixon cabinet member Wally Hickel in Alaska and former Sen. Lowell Weicker in Connecticut.

Among Democratic incumbents, Minnesota Gov. Rudy Perpich is in danger despite Republican turmoil. GOP nominee Jon Gruneth withdrew last week because of a sexual impropriety scandal and was replaced by Arne Carlson, who was strongly opposed by anti-abortion conservatives.

For all the Republican woes, polls showed Carlson in a tight race with Perpich, a two-term incumbent known for his eccentricity.

Democrats are in danger of losing Ohio. Republican George Voinovich, the former mayor of Cleveland, is leading Democrat Anthony Calesbrezze, who made a celebrated switch to support for abortion rights. Democratic Gov. Richard Celeste is retiring.

Seeking a third term in Michigan, Democrat James Blanchard is in a race that has tightened in recent days. A late poll showed Republican John Engler pulling to within four percentage points.

But a combination of economic recession, the abortion issue and a variety of regional distinctions appears to give Democrats the upper hand in many of the governor's races.

"Close to an unmitigated disaster," was how conservative political consultant David Keene summarized GOP prospects. "The only hope we have is the volatility."

Republican attention has focused on the biggest states, where the party hopes to hold veto power when Democratic legislatures draw new congressional maps to reflect results of the 1990 Census.

California is the biggest prize, with a potential seven-seat House gain. Democrat Dianne Feinstein is in a close race against GOP Sen.

Pete Wilson, though some polls give Wilson the edge.

"California — that's the ball game," said Norm Cummings, political director of the Republican National Committee.

In Florida, Martinez has recovered from a double-digit deficit in the polls but still faces high negative ratings left from a tax flip-flop early in his term and anger over his anti-abortion moves.

Chiles has his own troubles, too, however, including controversy over his acknowledged use of an anti-depression drug. The National Abortion Rights Action League has been airing anti-Martinez commercials, though Chiles appears reluctant to push the issue much himself.

Another headline race is in Texas, where Republican Clayton Williams has squandered a big lead through a series of gaffs, including his refusal to shake hands with Democrat Ann Richards. Williams, who has put some $8 million of his own money into the race, has built a following by campaigning as a rough-hewn Texas cowboy.

His string of missteps continued into the final weekend of the campaign, when he admitted in an offhand way that he paid no income taxes for 1986. Polls showed the race as a toss-up.

Washington looks for villain in student loan program

(CPS) - The nation's student loan program is near collapse, many colleges are on the fiscal ropes and students' costs are rising faster than almost anyone else's.

But, for the first time in 10 years, the U.S. Dept. of Education, which administers most federal college programs, has admitted it might have something to do with it all.

In what some consider to be some sort of milestone, U.S. Education Secretary Lauro Cavazos admitted earlier this month that his department may be partly to blame for the accumulated problems of the federal student loan program.

"We have failed many times as a department, but I really feel during our watch we have addressed the issue," Cavazos told the permanent subcommittee on investigations of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee Oct. 11.

The secretary's remarks came at the final hearing in the subcommittee's year-long investigation of student loan programs. The findings will be used to recommend changes in the financial aid program.

"The secretary is to be congratulated for facing up to facts," said Charles Saunders of the American Council on Education. "But the question is, what are they going to do about it?"

The entire student loan system almost collapsed this summer when the nation's largest student loan guarantor, a Kansas-based agency called the Higher Education Assistance Foundation (HEAF), ran out of money trying to pay for student defaults.

In early October, the Student Loan Marketing Association - often called Sallie Mae - assumed most of HEAF's troubled loans.

But in mid-October, the Federal Bureau of Investigation revealed it is investigating Sallie Mae for possibly fraudulently trying to make itself look financially stronger than it actually is.

"Unfortunately, through all these hearings, we did not hear of even a single major component of the guaranteed student loan program that is working efficiently or effectively," said Sen. Sam Nunn (D-Ga.), the subcommittee's chairman.

All parties agree the student aid system's biggest problem is that so many college loans are not being repaid.

Last year, the government gave $2.4 billion to banks to cover loans that students failed to repay. Ordinarily, the money would have gone to students to help pay tuition.

Observers, however, disagree about who's to blame for the high default rate.

Some blame unscrupulous trade schools that, to help students pay them, simply secure federal loans for students regardless of the students' ability to repay.

Others have blamed college-accrediting agencies, Congress and students themselves.

Many educators blamed the Education Dept. itself for radically changing its philosophy in 1981, when it switched the college aid program from emphasizing grants - which don't have to be repaid - to loans to students.

Even responsible students, the educators argued, would have trouble repaying the kind of debt the department's new policy would pile on them.

"We have relied on loans when we should have relied on grants," said Terrel Bell, who served as secretary of education when the change was made.

"It was a constant struggle" to get funding for the programs, Bell recalled. "Because of those budgetary pressures, we went to loans. Policy-wise, it was not a good thing to do."

"The bad guys are the ones defaulting," retorted Chester Finn, a former Education Department appointee who helped shape the new policy at the advent of the Reagan administration.

Blaming the department, he said, is "like blaming the New York cops for crime. It's not their fault."

While Cavazos admitted his department had something to do with the default buildup, the secretary reserved most of the blame for Congress, which he claims didn't grant him the authority he needed to properly regulate the program.

Finn also likes the idea of blaming Congress, which he says is succumbing to outside pressure from lobbyists representing trade schools.

"Congress has been lobbied as heavily on this issue as anything I've ever seen," charged Finn, "and they've responded to that pressure."

Even during Bell's tenure from 1981-85, lobbying on behalf of the for-profit schools was "amazing."

Because the schools were a form of private enterprise, Bell remembered, "they were the choice above all others in the minds of conservatives."

Nowadays, Cavazos complained at the hearings, Congress has not approved five of his eight proposals for curbing defaults, particularly at proprietary trade schools. The proposals would have banned sales commissions for student recruiters, required credit checks on older loan applicants, allowed loan guarantee agencies to attach defaulters' wages, mandated independent testing of borrowers without high school diplomas and made lenders offer flexible repayment schedules.

The Senate subcommittee, in turn, accused the department of bungling the loan programs.

"To date, no area examined in the federal student aid programs is operating efficiently or effectively," said David Buckley, the subcommittee's chief investigator.

"Every individual we have spoken to, without exception, has told us that, despite recent changes in program administration, the system is broken and that major changes must be made immediately to save the taxpayers' money," he added.

The department's enforcement practices, Buckley continued, are "disjointed and largely ineffective."

"They haven't used the authority they've got," agreed ACE's Saunders.

Cavazos' predecessor, William Bennett, often traced the default buildup to colleges that were too wasteful, compacent and bureaucratic to solve the problems.

'Leaves' leaves its audience laughing

By Frank Spurr
Staff Writer

The audience at the Pavilion Theatre couldn't decide whether to laugh or cry when it saw John Guare's The House of Blue Leaves Saturday night. So it did both.

The comedy/tragedy was directed by graduate student Reed Farrar for his master's thesis project. The show has played to capacity crowds all weekend and had Saturday night's audience screaming with laughter one minute, then reaching for the Kleenex the next.

Blue Leaves is a play about the aspirations of people living in Sunnyside, Queens, New York City during the 1960s. It mixes pop culture, like the fascination with Jacqueline Kennedy and the Beatles, with the traumas and trials of coping with a mentally ill family member.

Artie Shaughnessy, played by Corey Gagne, is a zookeeper who writes music on the side. He is hoping for his big break. With the help of Bunny Flings, played by Elizabeth Nicholas, he is encouraged to contact old friend and successful movie producer Billy Einhorn in the hope that Einhorn will use his music in an upcoming movie.

Artie is married to Bananas, played by Leslie Gamble. With the encouragement of Bunny, he decides that Bananas would be better off in a mental hospital. Bananas, of course, does not want to go. Her only wish is to experience the feelings which have been denied to her.

"For once, could you let me have an emotion? If I laugh, you give me a pill. If I cry, you give me a pill," she says in the first act.

The cruelty of Bunny and Artie toward Bananas is evident from the outset of the play. Bunny has an overwhelming command over Artie and easily persuades him to send Bananas away while telling her of the horrors of shock therapy.

But Bananas has a strength that won't be easily silenced and several of her speeches moved even Artie, who seemed to have separated from her emotionally.

When faced with the prospect of shock therapy, Bananas compares it to a concentration camp oven saying that with such an oven, they put you in and take you out only once. But with shock treatment, they put you in, take you out, put you in and take you out again and again.

Gamble was outstanding as Bananas. Her portrayal was moving and charismatic. Her face expressed the inner torment of a mentally ill person scared for her future and petrified that she has lost control of her life.

Her smiles mixed well with her frustration, as she begged Billy, (Andrew Mansfield), not to let them take her away.

She also had the audience on the edge of its seat in the final scene when she attempts to bring Artie back to her after Bunny dumps him for Billy. Bananas hugs and kisses Billy and tells him that things will

When less means more

Election day is Tuesday.

Whoever we elect for our various offices, whatever referendums pass, one thing will be sure: campaigning in Maine has been, for the most part, clean.

Except, of course, for the governor's race. The contest has degenerated into more than just uncalled-for insults against the two partisan candidates — it has insulted the intelligence of the voters.

Joe Brennan, our former governor who pledged never to run a negative campaign, has called John McKernan everything from a liar to an idiot to a traitor.

McKernan, himself by no means a clean fighter, has called Brennan a liar, an idiot, and an incompetent and more.

Both have cleverly disguised their records with half-truths and distortions. Both have attacked their opponent's records through half-truths and distortions.

Most of all, neither has given the voters of Maine a single good reason to vote for them.

One might interpret that to mean, "Vote for Andrew Adams," the independant candidate in the election.

BY NO MEANS does the incompetence of Brennan and McKernan mean vote for Adams. Adams is a candidate who knows what he's against (virtually everything) but has no idea what he's for.

What is means is, vote for the candidate you think is less of a liar, or fool, or braggart.

That's a hell of a contest, to be sure, but both candidates have done good things for Maine as governor. Both are probably capable of doing the same in the future.

It's too bad they couldn't follow the lead of other candidates in this election year and do the people of Maine a favor — cut out the negative campaigning and let their own records stand up.

Because that is what you must do to determine who should win this election. May the best loser win.

ARMS CONTROL CHEATING

Losing your consonants

You are in an unfamiliar land if you have never seen endless miles of trees, lots of buildings under four stories tall, and cities like Portland, which are considered big.

If these things do indeed seem strange you, welcome to Maine, where there must be a tree-human ratio of 100,000 to 1.

But this is not about the fact that Maine does have some forest outside of Brazil that is not being razed. No, this is to further explain accents and slang terms that are unique to Maine.

While many consider this accent the sign of a country hick it is indeed spoken in the state by many who are not all members of the Clampett family.

Lack of the letter "r" in speech occurs in the middle or end of words, but never in the beginning. "Car" becomes "cah," "park" becomes "pahk," and names like "Herbie" are transformed to "Hubbie." The most obvious sign of a Maine accent is the "yuh" sound at the end of words, as in the popular saying, "You cah'n't get theyuh from heyuh." Endings are cut off at times in speech, especially with words ending in "ing," which are changed to "in." Another ending change occurs with words that end with an "a," which do not have an r added, but an "ah" sound: "Augusta is the capital of ouwah great state."

If one is referred to as "Deah" by some stranger, do not be offended. It is the Maine equivalent of "honey" or "sugar" and is meant to be an intimate greeting said by someone you have never met before in your life.

Women are called this more often than men, but the word can be used for both genders. It is important to remember that slang terms in Maine are meant to be used with the least amount of effort, and having male and female slang terms is much too difficult.

The "F" and "S" words or any other words relating to the anatomy and human late-night entertainment are out, while disobeying the second commandment is in. "Jesus Christ," "Goddamn," "by the Jesus," and anything relating to hell, are quite popular. "Oh my God" is not, unless you are a teenager.

"Ayuh" is definitely out, used mostly by elderly Mainers who have not realized it has been a stereotypical Maine slang which tourists love to hear. Being considered cute by a tourist is a terrible fate to be left to fawns and helpless puppies in most of the state, and so it has been scrapped. "Yessuh" is more in vogue.

Foreign names are never pronounced the way they're supposed to be pronounced, even though Maine has many towns named after foreign cities. The Maine pronunciation of the town Calais doesn't sound the same as it would in Normandy, but rather like the hardened areas of skin commonly found on the hands and feet. "Wicked" has joined "ayuh" as a stereotype of the Maine dialect and is diminishing in popularity. It had a resurgence in popularity several years ago in the slang of teens and preteens, but has since vanished from the world of adjectives.

In short, the Maine dialect is alive and well, although some of the famous stereotypes have lost their spots of prominence. If you doubt that it's still kicking, just take a moment from your daily schedule and listen. You're sure to find a few examples slipped into the conversation. For a test that is quicker, ask individuals in question if they have ever been to the "Governor's." If they mention Augusta, you know that they're not from around here.

Mike Reagan is a junior journalism major from the Portland area who prides himself on his keen knowledge of Maine and its dialects.

Poll shows gubernatorial race too close to call

AUGUSTA, Maine (AP) — With Maine's gubernatorial campaign in the final stretch, an independent poll says the race between Democrat Joseph E. Brennan and Republican John R. McKernan is too close to call.

Spokesmen for both the Brennan and McKernan campaigns said this weekend that their camps also viewed the race as tight.

A survey of 659 people describing themselves last week as very likely to vote gave Brennan a lead of just under 2 percentage points over McKernan, the incumbent governor.

Brennan, the 1st District congressman and former governor, registered 41.1 percent in the survey; support for McKernan, the governor and former congressman, was recorded at 39.2 percent.

The poll, conducted by the Augusta-based Capitol News Service for the Bangor Daily News and published Saturday, gave independent candidate Andrew Adam 9.7 percent. Ten percent of the respondents, polled Oct. 28-30, were said to be undecided.

The poll's sponsors said it had a margin of error of plus or minus 3 percent.

The new poll was a third in a series conducted by the news service that has shown McKernan narrowing a lead once put at about 12 percentage points earlier this fall.

The new poll had Brennan leading among women and in Maine's 1st Congressional District, which has been represented by both of the major party candidates in Congress and which includes Brennan's home base of Portland.

The survey put McKernan in front among men and in the 2nd District, which includes his hometown of Bangor and which is represented in Congress by his wife, U.S. Rep. Olympia J. Snowe.

According to the Daily News, slightly more than half of Adam's support came from respondents identifying themselves as independents with the rest split about evenly between Democrats and Republicans.

The news service said the undecided block was made up mostly of independent voters — 55.1 percent. The rest of those declaring no preference were split, 34.8 percent Democrats and 10.1 percent Republican.

Of those declaring for a candidate, Brennan led McKernan among independents, 39.8 percent to 33 percent, according to the poll.

The news service, in a similar-sized survey of likely referendum voters conducted in conjunction with WGME-TV, found that opposition to a ballot proposal to ease Sunday sales restrictions in Maine had grown since another poll three weeks ago, but that supporters of the proposal still led by 15 percentage points.

The latest poll gave Sunday sales supporters 55.6 percent, with opponents recorded at 40.1 percent.

Volunteer service bill inches closer to becoming new law

WASHINGTON (CPS) — The national volunteer service bill is two steps away from becoming law.

If it passes, students could earn a small weekly stipend and a voucher worth about $5,000 to help pay for college by working one-to-two years full time in an authorized community service program.

Students also could work part-time nine hours a week plus two 40-hour weeks during the two years — for a $2,000 college voucher and a stipend.

The measure also encourages schools to create service programs on their campuses, and authorized funds for President Bush's volunteer "Points of Light Initiative."

The Senate approved a compromise version of the bill 75-21 late Oct. 15. The law will establish a National Service Board to distribute grants to youth service corps around the country.

not yet taken effect, according to the report.

The state should use funding levels of 1986 as a standard for heat funding, said commission Chairman Stephen Ward, the state's public advocate.

"The group has come to appreciate the extent to which there are simply not adequate levels of income to allow many low-income households to meet their basic energy needs," said Ward.

Nicola Kobritz, director of the state Division of Community Services and a member of the study panel, believes the shortfall is overstated.

A combination of federal money and $1.6 million from the state last winter increased the total HEAP budget to about $20 million.

A small increase expected in federal funding this year should bring the total budget to about $22 million, which Kobritz says is enough to avoid a shortfall.

But Kobritz added that her assumptions are based on fuel prices being less than $1 a gallon, benefit levels that don't rise above $280, and that thousands of new households don't apply for funds.

"Any of these assumptions could change at any moment," she said.

The commission recommends conservation steps be taken, such as requiring landlords to insulate their buildings up to state standards before selling and expanding government and utility "weatherization" programs.

It also suggests taxing heating fuels, including wood and electricity, to raise money for heating assistance.

The commission calls for a General Fund appropriation to supplement HEAP, he said.

Gagne and Nicholas also did a fine job in portraying Artie and Bunny. Their comic exchanges were hysterical, particularly when they discussed food or when Bunny danced to Artie's songs.

Greene runs, shoots as Terriers down UMaine

By Tim Hopley
For the Campus

Just like a Holyfield-Douglas war, The University of Maine Black Bears (2-7 overall, 2-6 Yankee Conference) with their strong ground attack, and the Boston University Terriers (5-4, 4-2) with their run and shoot offense, slugged it out Saturday afternoon before 6,726 fans at Alumni Field.

A last-minute Carl Smith lunge for a Bob Zurinkas pass, which would have put Maine in field goal range, wasn't meant to be, as the pass tipped off Smith's fingertips, allowing the Terriers to hold on for a 26-24 victory.

BU quarterback Stan Greene, 30 for 48 on the day for 376 yards and three TDs, had given the Terriers the lead for good with 12:50 left to play in the game. Greene connected with sophomore wide receiver Scott Mallory (13 receptions for 168 yards, 2 TDs) on a 12-yard scoring strike.

At that point things looked bleak.

Enter Carl Smith and the UMaine "pony express" running attack. Smith (27 rushes-183 yards), reeled off consecutive runs of 15, 13, and after a quick breather, 6 more yards, bringing Maine to the BU 20 yard line.

Four plays later, three of them running, Zurinkas found TE Mark Shaw open in the end zone from five yards out making it 26-24 BU.

Smith, who entered the game with 482 yards rushing on the year, seemed to return to the Carl Smith form of old, in what was his most successful game of the year.

When asked what the difference was in this game, Smith replied that he "decided he was going back to his running style of last year, instead of trying to be a power back."

Smith also said the offensive line did a good job opening holes to run through. That, and the fact that the BU defense wasn't one of the better ones in the YC, resulted in the yardage.

Not included in Smith's starts for the day, was a 52-yard TD run called back due to a holding penalty, the second such call in the last two weeks.

As evident on the Smith run, penalty calls ran rampant again this week.

The two teams combined for 23 penalties and 176 lost yards, something UMaine Head Coach Kirk Ferentz was a bit unhappy with.

"It's a shame when football games come down to officiating," said Ferentz. "This is supposed to be a game for the players, not the officials."

When the flags weren't flying, this was a good football game. The Terriers and Black Bears combined for 831 yards of total offense, 465 for BU, 366 for UMaine.

BU quarterback Greene took full advantage of the cushion the Black Bear "D" was giving him, as he literally quick-slanted the defense to death while it protected against the big play.

According to BU Head Coach Dan Allen, his team seemed to shoot itself in the foot with penalties each time it got inside the Maine 20.

Allen said he was pleased with his team's character and effort and was "tickled to death to come out of Maine with a win."

The turning point in the game was a Black Bear fumble on a kickoff return mid-way through the third quarter.

After a BU TD pass of 21 yards from Greene to Daren Altieri (9 catches for 129 yards), making it 16-10 BU, the Black Bears' Frizell Davis took a hand off from Mark Dupree on a reverse kickoff return and coughed-up the ball. BU recovered at the Maine 33.

UMaine sophomore fullback Marc Curran is upended by a Boston University defender in the Bears' 26-24 loss, on Saturday. (Photo by John Baer)

Seven plays later, the Terriers had three more points on a Mike Brown 32-yard field goal.

When asked about the reverse kickoff return, Coach Ferentz said it's something the team has been working on the last couple of weeks.

Ferentz also noted the execution was fine, they just didn't hold on to the ball.

A high point on the afternoon, was a second-quarter drive that may have been the best of the year.

UMaine Title IX quest leads to birth of women's soccer

By Shelley Danforth
Staff Writer

Editor's Note: This is the second of a two-part series on Women's Soccer at UMaine.

At the end of the 1988 season, Judy Kirk and the women's soccer club approached the athletic department and administrators with concerns regarding the lack of progress in making soccer varsity, as the Athletic Advisory Board had suggested.

The University of Maine's adherence to Title IX of the Education Amendments of 1972, which prohibits sex discrimination in federally assisted programs, including college athletics, was again in question.

The athletic department and administrators agreed UMaine wasn't in compliance with Title IX, but said they were making efforts to comply.

Vice President for Administration Tom Aceto said he couldn't recall the sequence of events that led to the commitment to the women's program.

However, he said the university's commitment in providing equal opportunity for women's sports was very clear, then and now.

"We're not in full compliance, but we're making every effort to comply."

"There was great pressure from within the institution to do what was right. We couldn't continue to put it off. There was pressure to find dollars to get the program going."

Ian McCaw, assistant AD for external affairs, agreed the university has made the commitment to equating women's athletics and believes UMaine has been pro-active in that fact.

"Women's soccer is part of the process of equating women's sports," McCaw said. "We're working towards a parity, but we can't do it overnight."

In an apparent compromise between the university and women's soccer, Aceto proposed a plan in February of 1989 keeping women's soccer a club sport, but giving it a full-time coach. The program would then gain varsity status for the 1990 season.

The plan also involved a five-year progressive budget which would give the women's team the same budget as the men's in five years.

According to Anne Koutre, assistant AD for finance, the 1989 club team was given $5,000 to help get the program started.

The program received funding from a variety of incomes, such as summer clinics, raised ticket prices, concession stands and the athletic store.

Aceto said the fact the athletic department had to cut $300,000 and were still able to get the program going showed their commitment.

The budget, for the '90-91 season, not including salaries or scholarships, was set at $32,295. The projected budget for the '91-92 season is $35,000 with an estimated increase of $6,000 a year after that.

Koutre said the projections included allowances for inflation and other unsuspecting costs. But said the projections will probably be thrown off because of the budget cutbacks throughout the department.

Aceto said he hoped to equate the two budgets before the five year deadline.

"The support is the same where travel is concerned. We want to put together a tougher schedule, increase the number of scholarships and the recruiting budget each year," Aceto said.

After the decision was made to go ahead with Aceto's plan, the first need was to find a coach.

"The critical thing was to get a coach for the '89 season," Kirk said. "The coach needed to start recruiting."

A selection committee was set up and Heather Kirk was asked to serve as a player representative on that committee.

"Notices appeared in the spring and we had a summer deadline," Kirk said. "We did the whole thing in about two weeks. We had to make a decision fast."

Kirk said the committee screened about 30 applicants, and from there, narrowed it down to eight.

"From there we recommended our personal decisions to Kevin White. He made the final decision."

Moir Buckley, a 1984 graduate of the University of Connecticut was White's choice. Her previous coaching experience ranged from an assistant job at Fairfield University in 1988, to a volunteer assistant at Yale in 1986-87. She is also UConn's all-time leading scorer with 63 goals and 40 assists.

"I was getting the NCAA News," Buckley said. "Each week I would look through it and see if there were any soccer positions." "I saw (the UMaine position) and it was almost too late to apply. I took off work, typed up the letter and sent it out."

Buckley said Margaret Zillioux, assistant athletic director for academics, called her and questioned her for two hours. Before she knew it, she was asked to come to Orono and went home with a job.

"I don't know what I did, but I got the job."

Buckley said she was told the program was new, that it was on a five-year budget plan, and it would be a varsity program in the fall of 1990.

"I guess for me that was the best thing because I had never been a head coach. Everything was new."

Buckley worked without assistants for the '89 season, something she would not want to do again.

"I was by myself with 30 players. It was hard, but after they understood where I wanted to go, it was good."

Buckley and her team worked well enough to post an encouraging 8-5-1 record and were excited to be heading forward to Division I play.

Armed with a larger budget, Buckley was able to hire two assistants, Jen Kennedy and Steven Bishop. Kennedy was a player at UConn from 1984-87 before becoming an assistant there in 1989.

Bishop, a 1990 graduate of Brandeis University and four year varsity player, previously coached Massachusetts district and state select teams.

Todd Brennan, former UMaine soccer standout joined Buckley's staff to help with the goaltenders.

Buckley also brought in an impressive recruiting class that included goalkeeper Nicole Ricci (Andover, Mass.), Nicole Kimball (Bartlett, Alaska), and Nicole MacMillan (Arlington, Mass.).

Buckley said not only did she recruit players for their soccer skills, but for their academic skills as well. Ricci was a second-team All-Scholastic player in 1989, and Kimball was a Presidential Scholarship recipient and is enrolled in the honors program at UMaine.

"It's not as much as you recruit good soccer players, but you recruit good people," Buckley said. "Soccer's not everything that's up here, there's school."

Buckley said she tells recruits that UMaine women's soccer is new and exciting, and because of that, they could have an immediate impact on the team.

"There's also the tradition involved. These players will be UMaine soccer and, for some people that's a neat concept," Buckley said.

UMaine finished the 1990 season with a 6-9 record and the confidence and nucleus to build on. UMaine will join the North Atlantic Conference next season.

"We have to add Division I teams, and we need more games to be consistently competitive," Buckley said.

Everyone involved in the journey from "renegade club," to official club, to varsity status, said it has been long and difficult. It was a road that included bus breakdowns, sporadic respect, personality clashes, and 22 players changing in the ladies room.

Judy Kirk said the struggle was worth the result and, "It's good (that) you have to work for something, it makes you appreciate it more."

"It was probably harder for me," Buckley said. "Those guys had never been treated like varsity athletes."

Many people do not know how the UMaine women's soccer team came to being. It is here, and like many games in life, it's taken for granted.

Hockey Bears beat Denver in overtime

DENVER (AP)—Maine captain Scott Pellerin scooped home a backhander two and a half minutes into overtime to give the Black Bears a 3-2 win over Denver at the DU Arena Saturday night.

Pellerin, who had five points overall in Maine's weekend sweep, got Maine on the board first with a powerplay goal five minutes into the second period.

The game remained a taut defensive struggle until early in the third period when the Black Bears took two quick penalties. DU capitalized with a pair of their own powerplay goals just 1:12 apart to give the Pioneers a 2-1 lead.

Jay Moore and Lance Momotani were the marksmen for DU.

Denver nursed the lead late into the game until a pair of penalties gave Maine a two-man advantage with just under four minutes to play. Chris Izmes quickly took advantage with a blast from the point at 16:38 to set up Pellerin's dramatic game winner.

Mike Durham stopped 13 Denver shots to earn his third victory on the season for the Black Bears, who ran their record to 3-1-0.

Suns, Jazz make history with game in Tokyo

By Eric Talmadge
Associated Press Writer

TOKYO (AP)—As far as the NBA is concerned, a regular-season game is a regular-season game, even if it's played on the other side of the world.

So, for the first regular-season game for any major American pro league outside North America, the NBA brought more than just the Phoenix Suns and the Utah

Jazz.

"We have our own floor, baskets, backboards, clock and stat crew," NBA Commissioner David Stern said in a pre-game news conference Saturday.

"That was the most important priority for us, to make sure it was conducted in the way such a game should be conducted," he said.

NBA games are televised in more than 70 countries, and though games abroad are becoming more frequent for NBA players, until the series in Japan all had either been exhibition or tournament competitions.

"This is a new experience for us, so we're not making any definite plans except for to return home and analyze this event," Stern said.

Stern added, however, that he expects NBA opens outside of the United States to continue on a periodic basis. "We're just not sure about whether it will be every year."

"We've had so many requests for games like this," he said. "We've got a lot of items on our plate that we're just trying to sort out."

Among the countries that have expressed interest in hosting NBA games are Australia, Sweden, the Soviet Union, Italy and Israel, he said.

Stern recently traveled to China, where sports officials also suggested a game might be held. Stern, however, said the league "is not entertaining any such plans at the present time."

UMaine rugby men capture Division II title

By Christine Bigney
For the Campus

The unsung University of Maine Men's Rugby Club captured the Division II New England Championship title at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst, Mass. Oct. 27 and 28. The student-run team rocked together as they outscored their opponents 43-3.

Two years ago, the UMaine Rugby Club was invited to join the New England Rugby Football Union. Last year, the team placed second in Division II, but was defeated by Dartmouth College in the second round of the Division I tournament.

This year, UMaine ended with a 6-1 record, losing only to Bowdoin College. The rugger entered the tournament seeded fifth with the confidence and the desire to win because of their successful season.

Saturday, UMaine dominated St. Anselm College with a 15-3 win. Later that day, the team confronted the Coast Guard Academy, the number one seed. The UMaine rugger dug deep and shut out the Coast Guard Academy 16-0.

On Sunday, UMaine entered the finals with great intensity. The game was scoreless the first half. With 25 minutes left in the second half, Madison Palmer Whitney scored the first try (four points). Carlos Tezloff, with the "magic foot", kicked for the two extra points.

Shortly after, Pete Tiege scored a try and ended UMaine's scoring parade. Tezloff kicked for two extra points. What started out to be a tight game finished with Maine on top 12-0.

"The second half, we kept the intensity up," said Doug Snell, match secretary for the club. "Our backs modified remarkably. We kept it clean and got the advantage."

"We had strong running and kicking by Carl Tezloff and basically we pulled together and played as a team," added Whitney, club president.

MMA loses 21-10 to Plymouth State

PLYMOUTH, N.H. (AP)—Plymouth State fumbled five times and trailed 10-0 at halftime but stormed back to beat Maine Maritime, 21-10.

Quarterback Matt Jozokos threw three second-half touchdown passes to lead the Panthers (8-1). Jozokos, second overall in Division III history with 92 career touchdown passes, completed 17 of 26 passes for 170 yards.

Maine Maritime's Kirk Matthieu ran for 88 yards and scored a touchdown on a 15-yard run in the first quarter. James Merrifield kicked a 22-yard field goal midway through the second quarter to put Maine Maritime (5-4) up to 10-0.

Plymouth State stormed back in the third quarter as Jozokos hit Bill Dalton with an 8-yard scoring pass and then hooked up with Doug Cantrell on a 1-yard touchdown pass to put the Panthers up 14-10.

Jozokos hit Scott Benub with a 43-yard scoring strike with 3:34 left to put the game away. Plymouth State, which has won the New England Football Conference North Division title for the ninth time in 10 years, will play southern division champion Bridgewater State on Saturday for the overall conference title.
