CITIZENS :

I have to report that the condition of our schools during the past year has been satisfactory, considered from the standpoint of ungraded schools. They have the same merits and the same defects that district schools generally have—some excellent scholars, and a large proportion who are careless and indifferent. The notion, I fear, is altogether too prevalent, not only among pupils and parents, but sometimes among teachers, even, that getting over books is evidence of education. No notion can possibly be more erroneous. What we lack in our schools is thorough drill work in elementary principles, because the mastery of these principles is the foundation of all education; hence the importance of this early training. It is at this point that the graded school is so greatly superior to the ungraded school. In the graded school there is never any hurry; a specified amount of work is to be done during each term, and there is always time enough in which to do it. Pupils are required to review their work again and again, until the teacher is satisfied that they thoroughly understand it. In this way they go through the year's work, and if found competent, are promoted at the end of the year.

In our schools even the most competent teachers would find it impossible to pursue this course. There would probably be opposition on the part of parents who could not understand why their children should spend so much time on what they have already been over. In addition to this, pupils are generally ambitious to get into harder books. The result is, that they are nearly always studying something too difficult for them. For instance, I find pupils reading in a fourth or fifth reader, who, if they were in well graded schools, would be reading in a third reader. There they would be expected to be able not only to pronounce correctly and without hesitation, all the words in the book they were reading, but to read intelligently, bringing out the full sense of the matter read before taking a higher reader. In fact, they could not take a higher reader till they were promoted to a higher grade. The book is there for the year, and that with supplementary reading of the same grade, constitutes the reading matter for the year.

In our schools, from lack of this drill in the lower readers, we find many pupils blundering over their reading in the most lamentable manner, being unable to pronounce ordinary words correctly, and paying little or no attention to pauses or emphasis. As with reading, so with other branches; many of the pupils appear to be trying to do work which, from lack of previous drill and discipline, they are unable to master.

To the importance of this drill work I have frequently called the attention of both teachers and pupils, have always made it a point to talk it over with the pupils, and to illustrate what I meant by actual examples. I am very glad to say that the teachers have heartily agreed with me, and have used their best endeavors to accomplish all they could in this respect.

At best, with some exceptions, they cannot bring their pupils up to the standard of the graded school, but they can accomplish a great deal with the co-operation of the parents.

Some of our pupils compare favorably in scholarship with those of their ages in any schools. But these are the pupils who, early in their school life, determined to understand what they studied, and have persevered in so doing. Given good ability to start with and the opportunity, pupils of this sort must become good scholars. The opportunity is furnished by our district schools; we lack only pupils of determination, industry and perseverance. But unfortunately these qualities are not possessed by pupils generally. It is well enough known to teachers, that a large majority of pupils everywhere possess qualities of the very opposite nature; that they will not study of their own volition, that they must be constantly urged and stimulated, and that nothing short of the fear of failure to pass their examinations will induce them to do their work. For such pupils the district school is a paradise. They generally shirk their way, doing as little as possible, and coming out in the end with little to show for all the sacrifices their parents have made in the endeavor to give them the best education their means afford.

The question will naturally be asked, "How shall we improve our schools?" I know of no way except to employ the best teachers we can get, and to pay the superintendent a sufficient salary to enable him to devote a large portion of his time to visiting schools, conferring with teachers, prescribing work for the pupils, and conducting recitations.

Some of our teachers have had but little experience, but give promise of a successful future, while a few are teachers of large experience and rare merit, who would gain high reputation in any community. All have labored earnestly and faithfully, and all, I think, deserve the confidence of the public.

In my report of last year I mentioned the necessity for the purchase of new books, and at its annual meeting the town appropriated $200 for that purpose. But as that sum was insufficient, we were obliged to exceed the appropriation. The entire cost of the books was $412.84, less $89.83 allowed for old books, leaving the net cost $323.01.

In closing this report I wish to thank teachers and parents for their uniform courtesy to me, and I wish especially to thank all the pupils for the respect they have always shown me. Though I value this conduct on their part very highly as a personal tribute, I value it still more highly as an evidence that our girls and boys are growing up to be ladies and gentlemen in the proper sense of those much abused terms. During my visits, I have talked to the pupils, and I have talked with them. I have asked them many questions, all of which they have done their best to answer, and with as fine a courtesy as I have ever seen anywhere. This conduct, children, is worthy of all praise. If you always show the same courtesy to all with whom you come in contact, including your teachers and play-mates, then truly will you be entitled to be called little ladies and gentlemen—the highest title, in my opinion, that can be conferred on you.
