

First Year Student Success Initiative
Working Group Charge

Student success is central to UMaine's mission, values, reputation and fiscal health. Improving first-year student success is a major focus for Academic Affairs and Student Affairs in 2018-2019. On September 27, we launched the public phase of this initiative at a faculty forum (<https://umaine.edu/provost/academic-affairs-faculty-forums/>). The goal is to develop an integrated plan of actions that will result in improved first year student success as defined by first year retention. Improving student retention adds to the fulfillment of our mission and will allow for creative reinvestment of resources. Several working groups will explore different components of the challenge of first year retention as well as various strategies for improving first year student success. All the working groups will be guided by the same set of principles that are guiding the broader initiative: 1) Consider what UMaine can do (i.e., what factors are within our sphere of influence); 2) Take a multi-pronged approach (i.e., consider multiple strategies); 3) Learn from others (i.e., consider what other universities do to support student success); and 4) Be data informed (i.e., test assumptions against available data).

Working Group: First Year Student Success Courses

Charge: All University of Maine students have access to a so-called first year success course. Develop a set of recommendations for ways to improve the quality of students' experiences in these courses. Please consider the following questions as you complete this work.

1. What are the goals of first year student success courses? How do they vary across colleges?
2. What core content should be included in first year success course?
3. What are considered best practices with respect to the following questions:
 - a. Should the course be required or recommended?
 - i. Should it be required of some students? If yes, which students and why?
 - b. How many credit hours?
 - c. Disciplinary cohorts versus mixed disciplines?

Support

Development of the First Year Student Success plan is a high priority for the Divisions of Academic Affairs and Students Affairs. Therefore, the resources available through these offices are available to you to support your work. For example, units within the two divisions can provide relevant information and the Office of Institutional Research can provide data and analyses. In addition, modest funds can be made available to support the working group (e.g., funds for members to travel to another institution to learn about their practices). Requests for support should be directed to Robin Delcourt in the Provost's Office.
