Domestic Travel (05/15/2020) -

The University of Maine System continues to prohibit all university-sponsored domestic travel beyond the State of Maine. Narrow exceptions remain for limited travel within Maine. Minimizing travel should be every employee's guide when considering whether to request, authorize, or direct domestic travel within Maine. The University understands that even at this time there is work which requires an employee's physical presence. In such cases and when the work cannot be postponed, such travel may be permitted with supervisory approval. Risk Management should be consulted for additional guidance in making these decisions if needed. For the limited travel that may occur, carpooling and sharing transportation with others except immediate family members is prohibited. The use of public transportation is prohibited unless absolutely necessary. University meetings of any kind will not require in-person attendance while this travel restriction is in place. In addition, Governor Mills issued an executive order on April 3, 2020, requiring anyone who travels outside the state to self-isolate for 14 days upon return to prevent spread of the virus. Finally, self-isolation may be required following travel within Maine if your travel involves areas where community transmission is confirmed. For more information, please see the self-isolation guidance posted on this web site.
