How should employees make a decision about self-isolating and quarantining during the pandemic?

August 31, 2020 | Health and safety

The University of Maine System has provided a situation matrix to help employees iin their decision-making about self-isolation and quarantine. The decision to start/stop quarantine or home isolation should be made in consultation with a healthcare provider and in line with state or local health departments. If you are experiencing symptoms associated with COVID-19, you should not be at work. Rather, you will be treated as a positive case and asked to follow quarantine and isolation protocols. The fact sheet is online.
