Biographical / Historical

A 1906 gift of $50,000 from Mr. Andrew Carnegie led to the construction of the first purpose built library on the University of Maine campus, prior to this date the library had been housed at first Fernald Hall and then in Coburn Hall. In 1941, the cornerstone was set for the current location of the library, but World War II delayed completion of the building until 1947. In 1962, the building was named after Raymond H. Fogler (University of Maine class of 1915) for his services to the University of Maine. In 1963, the library became a regional depository site for government documents and a new addition was completed in 1974. In 1995, the Library Annex was built on the south end of campus.

The first librarian of the University of Maine was Professor George H. Hamlin, Class of 1873 whose tenure was 1874-1884 and again in 1886. Hamlin was the son of Hannibal Hamlin, Vice President of the United States and first chair of the University of Maine Board of Trustees. Hamlin's successor was Professor Allen E. Rogers whose tenure was 1884-1886. Harriet C. Fernald then followed from 1890-1897. Fernald was succeeded by Maine native Ralph Kneeland Jones whose tenure was 1897-1917. Jones was born in Bangor, Maine on August 8, 1866 and died in 1917. There is correspondence from Jones (1915-1919) in the series and from his successor Raymond L. Walkley (1925-1928) whose tenure was 1920-1928. Following Walkley was Louis T. Ibbotson whose tenure was 1928-1962. Ibbotson was born on March 18, 1901 in Clinton, New York and died in 1983. It was during Ibbotson's tenure that the Library relocated to Fogler Library.

The majority of records in this record group were created during the tenure of Ibbotson's successor James C. MacCampbell whose tenure as director of libraries was 1962-1982. For a time Campbell was also responsible for libraries at the Portland and Augusta campuses. MacCampbell's first came to the University of Maine in 1957 to teach in the College of Education having begun his education career in Ohio. Fogler Library went through dramatic changes during MacCampbell's tenure, including: a significant increase in library holdings, improvements in the processing and organization of government documents, the University of Maine becoming in 1966 a multi-state regional government documents depository, the development of the University of Maine Masters Program in Library Science, the establishment in 1970 of Fogler Library's Special Collections Department, and the 1974 library building additions. MacCampbell also served on a number of University of Maine and library association committees, including as President of the Maine Library Association. Following his retirement as University Librarian in 1982 MacCampbell served as director of the Margaret Chase Smith Library in Skowhegan, Maine until 1987.

In 1983, Elaine Albright was appointed as MacCampbell's permanent successor. Maine native Albright had previously worked as director of the Lincoln Trail Library System and as a librarian at the University of Illinois. In 1992, Albright was appointed the Dean of the Department of Cultural Affairs and Libraries which included the Fogler Library, Maine Center for the Arts, and Museum of Art. During Albright's tenure the University of Maine transitioned from the paper card system into the world of library automation with the formation of the URSUS consortia which would eventually be expanded to include the libraries in the University of Maine System, the Maine State Library, Bangor Public Library and the Maine Law and Legislative Library. This group first came together in the mid-1980s with the goal of sharing a library catalog. In 1988, URSUS would purchase an Integrated Library System from the vendor Innovative Interfaces, Inc. In 1996, Maine InfoNet was established as a technology and automation management and support organization, and as an umbrella organization charged with oversight of several statewide projects. Many of the records on the automation process were created and curated by Marilyn Lutz who joined the University of Maine as Systems Librarian in 1987 from OCLC. Lutz would later work for Maine InfoNet. Lutz left the University of Maine in 2010.

Albright left the library in 2003. After serving as Interim Director from June 2003 to December 2004, Joyce V. Rumery was appointed Dean of University Libraries in January 2005.
